When Pentonville Model Prison was opened in 1842, the employment of prisoners in the manufacture of articles for sale was one of the principal features of the new system, and the mat-making industry was adopted, among many others, such as tailoring, &c. Complaints were made by free workmen against prison competition, and the sale of prison made articles was discontinued in all industries except mat-making, which was excepted for the reason given in the following passage of the Report of the Commissioners of Pentonville Prison for the year 1850, which is in accordance with the statement above quoted, that at that time mat-making was almost entirely a prison industry:—

"Mat-making alone is turned to profit by outdoor sale; but from the inquiries we have made, we are led to believe that no particular interests are likely to be injuriously affected thereby."

The manufacture of mats and matting is carried on in three ways:—

(1.) The operator may work at a frame or hand-loom, making ordinary door mats.

(2.) He may work at a loom weaving matting in long lengths like a carpet; this method applies to matting for covering large spaces or great lengths.

(3.) Steam engines may be employed for weaving matting instead of manual labour. This method is the more general in the north of England, and was, till 1878, largely practised at Wakefield Prison.

In the south of England the free operators work principally at frames and looms, and, as they have to compete with machine work, it is intelligible that they should earn low wages, even if there were no other reason. But as it is work requiring very little skill, and which can be carried on by cripples, blind people, and women, as a matter of course wages must be low.

Every possible endeavour has been made to meet the views of the persons who of late years have complained that prison labour unfairly competes with free labour. In and before 1878 the number of prisoners in local prisons employed making mats was 2,823, and in 1874, 348 were employed in convict prisons. To the work done by this number of men should be added the work done by steam engine power in prisons. Since then the number of men employed in prisons has been gradually reduced to 1,472 in local prisons and none in convict prisons, and only one steam engine is employed, and that in making matting.

But even this number gives a very exaggerated idea of the competition by prison labour, because, from various causes arising out of the conditions under which work is carried on in prisons and the want of skill arising from the fluctuating population in them, it is estimated that they are equivalent only to one-fourth or one-fifth, and some say less, of the same number of free workmen.

These reductions in numbers have not, however, apparently made matmakers' wages any higher, and only temporarily checked the agitation. The reason is twofold, first, that, whilst prison mat-making has been diminished, other competitors have arisen in larger numbers to take its place. There are now 55 firms of private makers in England, of which 15 have been established within the last few years. There may be a few small makers besides these, and the older firms have naturally extended their work. The private manufacture of matting largely extended itself, even while the prison manufacture was in full vigour and the diminution in the number of prisoners employed has apparently resulted in bringing in additional free competition rather than in raising the wages of those who were in the trade before.

Matting made by power looms has since 1878 been sent to Europe direct from India. Germany commenced to export to England about 10 years ago, Belgium about six or seven years ago; France and Holland also manufacture mats now, though it is not known whether they export them. Mats are also made in our colonies, so that foreign countries and colonies not only cease to afford a market for English mats, but they send their mats over to England and to places which we formerly supplied. Persons have been sent over from America and from Belgium to obtain a knowledge of the trade with a view to introducing it into prisons in those countries. Blind institutions and other establishments, 41 in number, have undertaken the work for the same reason that the prisons do, viz., it is a trade easily learnt and requiring but little skill; and this, as already stated, would sufficiently explain why wages must be low in this trade, besides that the operatives have to compete with machines.

The mat trade has also to contend with the introduction of new materials, such as india-rubber, new sorts of floor cloth, cheap carpets, &c., and cheaper sorts of mat, such as the common brush or Melford mat, which is sold more largely than any other and at rather less than half the price of any mat of the kind made in prisons.

There is, therefore, not the smallest ground for supposing that either wages or profits would be increased by the cessation of mat-making in prisons.

In order to obtain the best prices we could for our mats and matting we some years ago took to selling them by auction. We found that the buyers who attended combined to keep down the price, so that we got less than when we sold at a fixed price. We, therefore, reverted to that system. We now endeavour to obtain the advantage of competition among the local and general dealers by obtaining tenders for all we can make during a fixed time, and contracting with the dealer who will give us the best prices. We believe that in this way we get the full market value of our work. The contractor supplies the raw material and has to pay for its carriage to and from the prison; he must therefore allow for this in his price, and also for the obvious disadvantage that unskilled labour, such as much of ours is, causes a waste of material. We also make for Government, which the agitators make no objection to.

WORKSHOPS AT WANDSWORTH PRISON.

The workshops at Wandsworth Prison were built by prison labour in 1889–90, at a cost of 1,175*l.*, to accommodate prisoners employed in the following trades:—Brushmaking, tailoring, shoemaking, and bookbinding, to keep the prisoners so employed in separation as much as possible, and at the same time under complete supervision of one or more officers.

The building is of brick, with an open slate roof, and is lighted by skylights in the roof. It is heated by hot-water coils in connexion with a small boiler. Fresh air is admitted under the coils, and the foul air is extracted by Buchan's induced current ventilation in the roof.

The temperature can be very equally maintained.

There is accommodation for 17 tailors, 15 shoemakers, and 25 brushmakers, working in separation, besides cutting rooms for tailors and shoemakers, and an enclosed place for bookbinders. These have glazed partitions, so that the supervision can be maintained from the centre of the building.

Much of the brushmaking work requires gas heaters, &c., and special provision has been made for the removal of the fumes which are produced in the manufacture.

Standing Order No. 213. [Local Prisons.]

PRISONERS' LETTERS AND VISITS.

19th June 1893.

Communications from prisoners on remand or for trial.

1. Every prisoner committed to prison on remand or for trial will be afforded immediate and ample facilities for communicating with his friends or legal advisers. Letters from such prisoners will be sent by post or otherwise with the least possible delay. Telegrams will also be sent at once if the prisoner so desires it, but at his own expense.

2. Any such prisoner who is a foreigner shall, if he desires it, be allowed to communicate immediately, by letter or telegram, with the Embassy or Legation or with the Consular officer of his country.

Communications relative to the production of witnesses of prisoners awaiting trial.

3. If a prisoner awaiting trial, who is not employing a solicitor, wishes any witnesses to appear in his defence, he shall be afforded every facility, or, if need be, assistance, in writing to his friends to procure their attendance.

4. If the prisoner desires it, he may communicate with the police, requesting them to ask any such witnesses to attend. The police will no doubt do their best for this purpose, but it must be understood that they cannot make themselves responsible that the persons whose attendance is desired shall attend.

5. A notice ($\frac{\text{L.P.}}{\text{D. 172}}$) to the above effect is to be placed in the cell occupied by every prisoner awaiting trial, and the prisoner's attention drawn to it. If the prisoner cannot read it it should be read to him.

6. The governor should be prepared to inform the judge at the trial that this information has been conveyed to the prisoner, and what witnesses, if any, he has asked to be sent for.

Rules as to letters and visits of convicted prisoners to be communicated to prisoners awaiting trial.

7. Every prisoner under committal for trial should be warned of the restrictions imposed by the rules upon the letters and visits of convicted prisoners, in order that he may in good time make any necessary arrangements respecting his private affairs in case he should be convicted.

Special letter or visit on conviction.

8. If such arrangements cannot be completed before the prisoner is convicted and sentenced, the governor may, if necessary, allow him on return from court to write a letter or to receive a visitor, in order to complete any such arrangements.

Notification to prisoner's friends.

9. If the governor is satisfied that a prisoner's friends are not aware that he is under sentence, or in what prison he is confined, and that it is desirable that they should be informed, a notification (on Form $\frac{\text{L.P.}}{\text{C. 3}}$), signed by the prisoner, will be sent to his nearest friend.

Regulations as to letters and visits to be posted up.

10. The regulations as to letters and visits should be made known to the friends of prisoners by posting an abstract of them in the visiting room, and by any other suitable means.

Letter and visit allowed to penal servitude prisoner on conviction.

11. Every prisoner sentenced to penal servitude shall, on conviction, be allowed to write one letter and receive a reply, also to receive one visit, under the usual restrictions. As writing letters and receiving visits from friends are privileges reserved as encouragements to good conduct and industry, and accorded only at specified periods and under definite rules, the letter and visit above referred to must not be postponed in such a way as to interfere with the operation of these rules. Without laying down a rigid rule upon the subject the Commissioners desire that the period within which they shall be permitted shall be limited to about one week from the date of sentence as provided in paragraphs 9 and 10 of Standing Order 206.

12. Should a further interview be, in the opinion of the governor, of great importance, and the matter too urgent to allow of an application to the Commissioners, the governor may, in his discretion, permit it. But all such cases shall be at once reported to the Commissioners, with a statement of the reasons why the second visit was allowed.

Communication of matter of

13. The governor may at any time communicate to a prisoner or to his friends any matter of importance to such prisoner in case he should not be entitled to write or receive a letter.

Importa... to a pris... or his friends.

14. Excepting only a confidential communication prepared by an untried prisoner as instructions for a solicitor (mentioned in No. 23 of the rules for prisoners awaiting trial), all written communications whatsoever to or from prisoners of every class must pass through the governor.

Commun... tions to from pri... soners t... pass through governor.

Letters ... and from... debtor prisoner...

15. Letters to prisoners who are debtors within the meaning of the Prison Act, 1865, shall, as a rule, be delivered to them unopened, and letters sent by them shall, as a rule, be forwarded unopened. But if the governor has reason to believe that a letter contains tobacco or any other article prohibited by the rules, or that a debtor is in any other way making an improper use of the liberty to send or receive letters, or if the letter in question be allowed specially, in addition to those authorised by the rules, the governor may use his discretion as to opening it. But in any such case the letter is to be opened in the presence of the debtor, and the circumstance is to be entered in the governor's journal.

Letters t... be read b... governor or deputy governor...

16. With the exceptions specified in paragraphs 14 and 15, the governor or the deputy governor, when there is one, shall read every letter addressed to or written by a prisoner, and every such letter shall be initialled by the governor or deputy governor, as the case may be. If the contents shall appear to the governor to be objectionable on account of impropriety, or prejudicial to good order and discipline, or to the security of the prison, either the letter shall not be forwarded or the objectionable part shall be erased, according to discretion; but every case in which he may think it proper to withhold a letter for the above reason shall be noted by him in his journal.

Regulati... as to spe... visits to convicted prisoners...

17. The following regulations have been made by the Secretary of State as to the special visits of legal advisers and others to prisoners, and as to the mode in which they shall be conducted.

(1.) In order that reasonable facilities may be given for the transaction of any bonâ fide legal business of such a nature as to justify an interview in private, barristers or solicitors, conducting any legal proceedings, civil or criminal, in which the prisoner is a party, or bonâ fide acting as legal advisers to the prisoner in any legal business of his, may be allowed to see him with reference to such business in the sight, but not in the hearing, of an officer. It should be made clear that the interview is to be confined to legal business in which the prisoner is concerned, and it would be proper to require a pledge of conformity to that condition.

(2.) Barristers or solicitors, seeing a prisoner on any other business should see him in the sight and hearing of an officer.

(3.) All other special visits are to be in the sight and hearing of a prison officer, and no departure from this is to be entertained except in the case of the police, officials of the Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue, and other public departments, on application of a superior authority of those Departments.

(4.) Such interviews will be allowed only by order from the Prison Department, except in cases of extreme urgency, in which there is no time for application to the Secretary of State or to this Department, in which case the governor is allowed to grant the interview, reporting the same at once to the Prison Department.

(5.) All such visits are to be subject to the consent of the prisoner. This rule will not apply to visits from officials under Rule 3; but, in the latter case it will be clearly understood that the prisoner is free to refuse to make any statement or disclosure.

(6.) Any privilege beyond what is above stated is to be granted only on the order of the Secretary of State.

18. Standing Orders 6, 48, 84, 151, 159, 201, and 204 are hereby cancelled.

By Order of the Commissioners,

M. CLARE GARSIA,
Secretary.

Standing Order No. 228.
[Local Prisons.]

8th February 1895.

PRISONERS' LETTERS.

1. Governors are authorised to allow any prisoner who, under paragraph 14 of S.O. 203, is entitled to a visit, to write a letter and to receive a reply in lieu of such visit, should his friends be unable to visit him.

2. They are also authorised to allow any prisoner to write a special letter and to receive a reply under any of the following circumstances, if in their judgment it is desirable:—

(a.) The death of a near relative.

(b.) To give instructions as to his business or family affairs of an urgent nature.

(c.) To make arrangements for obtaining employment or assistance from friends on release.

3. Whenever a letter is allowed under the above authority, the governor will record the fact in his journal.

By order of the Commissioners,
M. CLARE GARSIA,
Secretary.

MEMORANDUM SETTING OUT THE REGULATIONS GOVERNING PRISONERS' AID SOCIETIES AND THE GOVERNMENT GRANT.

GRATUITIES TO PRISONERS AND CHARITIES.

In former times it was not uncommon for people to leave bequests for the relief of prisoners. The objects of these bequests have, in most cases, become impracticable or unnecessary, and, under 45 & 46 Vict. c. 65., it was made lawful to apply the funds to the relief of prisoners on discharge. The subsequent Charity Commissioners Act, embracing all charities in its scope, made it possible to apply these funds to purposes not connected with prisons at all, and many have in consequence been so diverted. When the Prison Commissioners took charge of the local prisons, they inquired into this subject and obtained a complete return from the Charity Commissioners of all the prison charities, see 6th Report of the Commissioners of Prisons (1882–3).

It appeared from this return that there were 228 such charitable endowments for the benefit of prisoners, of which the total income was 7,156*l.* A small number of similar endowments have been discovered since this return was made. Of the above income of 7,156*l.*, as much as 5,581*l.* had been already diverted from its original purposes by authoritative schemes; there remained, therefore, only 121 charities, with an income of 1,574*l.* 16*s.* to be dealt with. Subsequent accumulations have made the available income considerably larger than this amount.

It was the opinion of the Government, that those charities, at all events, which had not been devoted to other purposes ought to be made applicable to the aid of discharged prisoners. It was found that in order to carry this idea into effect, it was necessary that the Charity Commissioners should in each case be moved by some person having an interest in the fund, to make a scheme for its appropriation, so as to fulfil the above object. An Act of Parliament (45 & 46 Vict. c. 65.) was therefore passed, placing the Secretary of State in the position of a party interested in these funds, in order that he might be able to move the Charity Commissioners so to do.

The view of the Government on the subject in connexion with the grant to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies was that the whole of the bequests should be handed over to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, in lieu of the 4,000*l. per annum* which Her Majesty's Government had recently undertaken to pay to those societies.

The Secretary of State has moved the Charity Commissioners in 97 cases, and a model scheme for general application has now been settled which has been followed in several new schemes which have been framed, making the income of 92 charities available for discharged prisoners. In the case of four of the remainder, it has not been thought proper to devote them to this purpose; one remains still to be dealt with. The total annual income of the available Prison Charities is probably now about 2,050*l.*

Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies.

The rules under which a Government Grant towards the funds of these societies, as laid down originally, and as subsequently somewhat modified, were as follows:—

(1.) A sum of 4,000*l.* was fixed as the maximum of the grant, in respect of all the prisons, to be available if all the required conditions are fulfilled. This grant to be appropriated in the following manner.

(2.) There should be assigned to each prison, as its possible maximum, the proportion of the 4,000*l.*, which its average number of prisoners bears to the total average number, or which its annual discharges bear to the total annual discharges.

(3.) The sum to be granted on condition—

(a.) That there is a working Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, taking charge of the prisoners from that prison.

(b.) That the society receives subscriptions, to at least an equal amount, or if not, that the grant from Government be limited to an amount equal to what the society has received. If the grant in any year is less than the amount of the private subscriptions in that year, the society may take credit for the excess of subscriptions in order to make up, if necessary, the amount required to meet the grant in the succeeding year.

(c.) That the society has officers to manage it, not belonging to the prison staff. This was subsequently modified by the provision that prison officers may act on the Committees, and give assistance in working the societies.

(d.) That the society also takes charge, if required, of the sums awarded to prisoners under the progressive stage system, above a certain amount, which will be fixed.

(e.) That it makes grants only to prisoners who have earned as much as the rules allow. This was subsequently modified to the effect that prisoners recommended by the prison authorities as industrious and fairly conducted shall be permitted to participate in the benefit of the grant.

(f.) That the grant in aid of any prisoner shall not, in any case, exceed, on the whole, 2*l.*, including the sum awarded under the stage system.

The grant was sanctioned for five years, to 1887–8. The total amount sanctioned has never, hitherto, been extended, and in 1888 the amount was reduced to 1,500*l.* In order to bring the amount expended within this limit the following course has been adopted:—

As soon as a new scheme has been framed by the Charity Commissioners, making the income of the charity available for discharged prisoners, through the agency of a Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, the amount (if any) that has hitherto been allowed to such society out of the grant, has been reduced by the amount of the income of the charity.

The average amount granted to the society during the past three years is ascertained, and its future participation in the grant restricted to the difference between such average and the income of the charity; or, if such income equals or exceeds what the grant has averaged, the latter is discontinued altogether. The total amount of the grant from Government funds is not to exceed an amount calculated at the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per 100 prisoners discharged, less any amount available from any charitable endowment.

Refuge for the Destitute.

A grant of 325*l.* a year is made to the Refuge for the Destitute. This grant was transferred from the Vote for "Miscellaneous Charitable, &c. Allowances, Great Britain," in 1881–2, on the ground that it stands on much the same footing as the gratuities distributed through the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies. This institution, and the Philanthropic Society, founded in 1788 and incorporated in 1806, represent the first attempts made in this country for the reformation of youthful criminals, and the protection of children of convicts. A proposal to unite these two institutions in 1845 failed, but led ultimately to the reformatory movement in its present shape. The grant to the refuge was 3,000*l.* a year for many years. It was reduced to 2,000*l.* in 1849–50, to 1,000*l.* in 1850–51, and at length, in 1851–52, took its present form, namely, a contribution, at the rate of 5*s.* per week, in aid of the maintenance of 25 young females received into the refuges on their release from prison. The grant is paid half-yearly, on the application of the secretary.

Supreme Court, Victoria.

Law Courts, Melbourne,

Sir, August 25th, 1890.

I am willing and glad, in compliance with your request, to testify that the Rescue Department of the Salvation Army for some years past has done and is still doing in Melbourne, public service of a highly useful character, in my opinion; not only by giving material help and advice at a time when both are greatly needed to persons released from gaol, but also by its continuous efforts to rescue from crime young and inexperienced persons who are exposed to temptation, or who have taken only one or a few steps on the road to ruin. I am not aware of any other religious organisation than the Salvation Army that has engaged itself systematically on a large scale in this double work of help and rescue. And I am able, on this ground, as an individual, to give to the Rescue Department of the Army my cordial sympathy and support.

The prompt, practical, and judicious aid which the Salvation Army has been giving during the present winter to a large number of unemployed persons collected in Melbourne, also deserves the grateful acknowledgments of all Victorian citizens.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your faithful servant,
Geo. Higinbotham,
Chief Justice.

James Barker, Esq.

All the above acts are declared to be offences against prison discipline; and it shall be lawful for the gaoler to examine any person touching such offences, and to determine thereupon, and to punish such offences by ordering any offender for any time not exceeding three days to close confinement, to be kept there upon bread and water. And the gaoler shall enter in a separate book, called "the Punishment Book," a statement of the nature of any offence that he has punished in pursuance of this regulation, with the addition of the name of the offender, the date of the offence, and the amount of punishment inflicted.

Punishment of prisoners by visiting justices. Prison Act, 1865, Schedule I., Reg. 58.

If any criminal prisoner is guilty of repeated offences against prison discipline, or is guilty of any offence against prison discipline which the gaoler is not by this Act empowered to punish, the gaoler shall report the same to the visiting justices, or one of them, and any one of such justices, or any other justice having jurisdiction in the place to which the prison belongs, shall have power to inquire upon oath and to determine concerning any matter so reported to him, and to order the offender to be punished by confinement in a punishment cell for any term not exceeding one month, or, in the case of prisoners convicted of felony or sentenced to hard labour, by personal correction.*

Use of irons Prison Act, 1865, Schedule I., Reg. 59.

No prisoner shall be put in irons or under mechanical restraint by the gaoler of any prison, except in case of urgent necessity, and the particulars of every such case shall be forthwith entered in the gaoler's journal, and notice forthwith given thereof to one of the visiting justices; and no prisoner shall be kept in irons or under mechanical restraint for more than 24 hours without an order in writing from a visiting justice specifying the cause thereof, and the time during which the prisoner is to be kept in irons or under mechanical restraint, which order shall be preserved by the gaoler as his warrant.†

Corporal punishments. Prison Act 1865, Schedule I.; Reg. 60.

The surgeon shall give such orders for preventing injury to health as he may deem necessary, and it shall be the duty of the gaoler to carry them into effect, and the gaoler shall enter in the punishment book the hour at which the punishment is inflicted, the number of lashes, and any orders which the surgeon may have given on the occasion.

Rules made by the Secretary of State 19th February 1878.

55. No prisoner shall be punished until he has had an opportunity of hearing the charges and evidence against him, and of making his defence.

56. No dietary punishment shall be inflicted on any prisoner, nor shall he be placed in a punishment cell, nor shall corporal punishment be inflicted unless the surgeon shall certify that such prisoner is in a fit condition of health to undergo such punishment. APPENDIX VI.

60. The order for the punishment shall be duly entered in the appointed manner, and the number of lashes, and the instrument with which they are to be inflicted shall in all cases be stated in such order.

61. No irons or other means of restraint shall be made use of except those of such patterns as have been approved by the Secretary of State.

Rule made by Secretary of State on the 27th March 1893.

REPORT giving the PERIODS passed by J. E. in HOSPITAL at WANDSWORTH.

H.M. Prison, Wandsworth,
November 2, 1894.

Reg. 16,833, J. E. was admitted to the infirmary here on January 8th, 1892, suffering from an abscess in his right ear (meatus), and a second small abscess behind the ear. He was discharged on January 14th relieved, both abscesses having practically healed.

I then recommended that the remainder of his dietary punishment should be remitted on medical grounds.

On February 5th he was again admitted, as he was reported to be returning his food and refusing to work. He was placed under observation, and as he was found to take his food and wished to return to his work in the prison, he was discharged on the following day.

On February 7th, however, he again complained sick, and was found to have febrile symptoms, which proved to be the beginning of a mild attack of influenza. The febrile symptoms soon passed off, but as he appeared weak and had lost weight (12 pounds) he was kept in hospital till February 25th, 1892, when he was discharged recovered.

R. F. QUINTON,
Medical Officer.

The high ratio of prison offences in proportion to the population in the local as compared with the convict prisons is in part to be attributed to the morbid conditions generated in the local prisons by cellular confinement.

APPENDIX VII. (i.)

Standing Order No. 172.
[Local Prisons.]

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE MEDICAL OFFICER.

Prison Department, Home Office,
6th November 1888.

1. He will attend at the prison daily, not later than 9.30 a.m., and proceed at once to the performance of his duties.

2. The names of prisoners who appear out of health, or who desire to see the medical officer, will be handed to him soon after his arrival, and he will, without unnecessary delay, attend to these prisoners, and prescribe or give such instructions as he may deem necessary for them, in the book provided for the purpose.

3. He will visit, at the earliest convenient hour, the patients undergoing hospital treatment, and in each case he will enter such prescriptions and orders as may be necessary on the hospital case paper and hospital bed-head diet card. He will also enter, in the proper column of each hospital case paper, a sufficiently full and complete clinical account of the history and progress of the case. He will take care that on the discharge of a patient from hospital the case paper and diet card used for that patient are kept in the guard books provided for the purpose.

4. He will see all newly-arrived prisoners as soon as possible after their reception, and he will carefully examine them. If any are sentenced to hard labour, he will ascertain their fitness or otherwise for such labour or for any particular kind thereof. He will record the results of his examinations in the medical officer's reception register.

In the case of prisoners whose physical strength has been reduced by hardship and privation he will give all necessary instructions without loss of time.

In the event of prisoners having been received after his morning visit, he will pay a second visit to the reception cells before the officers go off duty for the day.

5. In order to give effect to the Rule No. 56 of the General Rules for Prisoners, that "No dietary punishment shall be inflicted on any prisoner, nor shall he be placed in a punishment cell, nor shall corporal punishment be inflicted, unless the surgeon shall certify that such prisoner is in a fit condition of health to undergo such punishment," he will, at a convenient hour, arranged between himself and the governor, see and examine the prisoners who may have been reported for idleness or misconduct, and, if he should find any prisoner unfit for any particular kind of punishment, he will at once furnish a certificate to that effect to the governor.

6. He will, in the course of the forenoon, visit any prisoner undergoing confinement in a punishment cell, or dietary punishment awarded on any previous day.

7. He will examine all prisoners whom it is proposed to remove to other prisons, and will certify whether they are fit or unfit for such removal, and he will forward such information with regard to those who are fit for removal as may be necessary or useful for the guidance of the medical officer of the prison to which they are to be removed.

8. He will be held responsible for the accurate dispensing of medicines for the patients under his medical charge.

9. He will satisfy himself by daily inspection and inquiry that any arrangements made for the care and management of prisoners who are unfit on medical grounds for separate confinement are carried into effect.

10. In the case of women who are found to be pregnant, he will give such instructions as may be necessary to ensure their safety, and he will satisfy himself that such instructions are carried out.

11. He will carefully examine all candidates for prison employment who may be brought before him, and will report as to the qualifications of such persons on the forms furnished for the purpose. As an interval may elapse between the preliminary examination of candidates and their appointment, he will also examine, before they commence their duties, subordinate officers appointed to the prison, and, if any be found unfit for the service, will make a report to that effect.

12. He will attend all such officers and servants of the prison, and their families, as are entitled to medical attendance, if resident at the establishment, or within such limits as may be prescribed, but he is not bound to attend on midwifery cases in officers' families.

13. He will make such recommendations as may be necessary in the case of prisoners whose mental capacity is defective. If any prisoner should be found to be in an unsound state of mind, he will furnish the requisite certificate of insanity, and he will make a special examination of every such prisoner immediately before his or her removal from the prison.

14. He will make a quarterly inspection, in the course of which he will inspect every prisoner and every part of the prison, in order to ascertain the existence or otherwise of any influences or sanitary defects that may be likely to endanger the health of the prisoners, and he will report for the information of the Commissioners any circumstances that may appear to require their consideration, and will record the general results of his inspection in his Journal.

15. The Medical Officer will vaccinate or re-vaccinate all prisoners sentenced to penal servitude, who do not present good marks of vaccination, before their removal from local to convict prisons. He will also vaccinate all children born in prison as soon after birth as he thinks it safe and desirable to perform the operation.

16. In the event of the sudden illness of a prisoner, or any other emergency, he will attend to any summons with the least possible delay. Whenever he may be temporarily absent from the prison, he will leave notice with the officer in charge of the Infirmary, and the gatekeeper, where he may be found, in case his services should be suddenly required.

17. He will carry out, in such manner as may from time to time be prescribed, all the directions contained in the Prison Acts, 1865 and 1877, relating to the Medical Officer, and such rules and orders as may be issued from time to time; and he will carefully and correctly fill up all such forms, and keep all such books as may from time to time be directed by the Prison Commissioners, and he will, punctually and with despatch, make all such returns and reports as the Commissioners may require.

18. Besides the performance of the foregoing duties, it is necessary that the services of the Medical Officer should be readily available, if occasion should require, in the course of the day. If resident, therefore, at the prison, or paid at the full rate authorised for a resident surgeon, he will take care to be at hand throughout the day, from the time at which the work of the prison commences to the hour at which the officers go off duty for the day. He will thus be ready to furnish, with facility, necessary information, if reference be made to him in any matter in which his opinion and advice would be likely to be useful to the superior authorities of the prison. If not resident, or paid as such, he will, besides the duties already prescribed, pay a visit to the prison daily, between 4 p.m. and the hour at which the officers go off duty. He will then, as before directed, examine any prisoners in the reception cells who may have been received since the morning, and he will discharge any other duties that circumstances may require.

19. It is to be understood that a Medical Officer cannot claim a fee beyond his regular salary for the examination of candidates, certificates of insanity, attendance at assize or other courts, or for the performance of any of the duties herein prescribed.

20. The foregoing regulations do not purport to comprise the whole of the duties of the Medical Officer, but are for his guidance in the matters to which they relate. It is expected that he will at all times carry out his instructions with good will and to the best of his ability, and will spare no effort to promote the wellbeing of the persons under his medical charge.

S.O. 65A is hereby revoked.

E. F. DU CANE.

Standing Order, No. 134.
[Local Prisons.]

CARE AND MANAGEMENT OF PRISONERS WHO ARE UNFIT ON MEDICAL GROUNDS FOR SEPARATE CONFINEMENT.

Prison Department, Home Office,
9th February 1885.

1. As it is frequently advisable to place in association prisoners who are mentally affected but who do not require treatment in hospital, as well as those who, by reason of infirmity, depression, or helplessness, or other causes, cannot be left alone in cells, especial care is to be taken that prisoners in such rooms shall be under the personal supervision of officers, or hired attendants, who shall be responsible that no prisoner shall be maltreated, but all properly cared for.

2. The Medical Officer should satisfy himself from time to time that the arrangements are effective for these purposes, and shall bring to the notice of the Governor any deficiency he may observe. APPENDIX VII.

3. Every room so occupied is to be visited frequently by the Governor and Chief Warder, and by the Officer in immediate charge of the ward.

4. It should be in such a position in the prison as to come frequently under the observation of officers passing, as well as of those specially charged with the duty of supervising it.

5. It must be provided with apertures or means of inspection so placed that the whole of the interior may be easily seen by any officer inspecting it.

6. Any irregularity, by whomsoever noticed, should be at once reported to the Governor.

By order of the Commissioners,
R. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

623. M. Æt 38.—Indecent assault. No sign of insanity for 55 days after imprisonment. Then an attack of acute mania showed itself.

BRISTOL.

4906. M. Æt 24.—Felonious wounding. No insane record, found sane on admission. No sign of madness for four months, when attempt at suicide was made. Was then certified as insane.

CARDIFF.

278. M. Æt 40.—Stealing tools. No insane record. Sane on admission; after 44 days melancholia came on with delusions as to persecution.

been previously in prison; was regarded as "a bit queer." Was punished for not working. Certified as a "dement" two months after admission.

DERBY.

1176. M. Æt 29.—Stealing fowls. No insane record. Fair health on admission, with somewhat peculiar manner. Soon proved quite unamenable to discipline, and after two months was certified as lunatic. A letter from his wife shows that his mind was wrong before conviction.

DURHAM.

2484. M. Æt 40.—Stealing a tin of biscuits. No insane record. Found weak, but not insane on admission; placed on light labour and better diet. Shortly afterwards symptoms of general paralysis with the delusions peculiar to that disease, appeared. Certified as insane after two months' imprisonment.

EXETER.

2241. M. Æt 32. Stealing a watch. No insane record. Sound on admission, though with a "weak countenance," began almost immediately to show signs of mental weakness, which steadily increased till his removal to an asylum.

478. M. Æt 27. Buggery: known to have been insane previously. Prisoner "obviously idiotic in appearance" on admission. Was certified 16 weeks afterwards.

784. M. Æt 34. Threatening violence. Not mentally deficient on admission. But a note from the justices said that in his parish he had the reputation of "not being in his right mind." After three weeks signs of melancholia appeared, and he was certified as insane.

IPSWICH.

90. F. Æt 35.—Murder. Was evidently insane when offence was committed.

KNUTSFORD.

G.S. 47. F. Æt 31.—Felony. "There is a history of her having been twice before in a lunatic asylum." Prisoner was in good mental health on admission, and continued so for four months, when signs of acute mania appeared.

LEEDS.

1201. F. 48.—Causing grievous bodily harm. No previous insane record. Melancholic and weak on admission. Certified, after five months' imprisonment, as insane. [No special report in this and following case, owing to death of medical officer.]

1753. F. 43.—Stealing draperies. No insane record. Mentally weak on admission. Certified at conclusion of two months' sentence as insane.

LEICESTER.

3883. M. Æt 24.—Unnatural offence. This prisoner was evidently insane at the time of his conviction.

LINCOLN.

776. M. Æt 61.—Murder. No insane record. Found to be insane by special Home Office Commission.

1840. M. Æt 37.—Sending threatening letter. No insane record. Mental condition on admission doubtful. Delusions appeared; certified as insane after three months' imprisonment.

LIVERPOOL.

8419. F. Æt 35.—Wilful damage. Previously insane. Sane on admission. This prisoner has a record of 73 convictions, varying from seven days to 18 months, for drunkenness, window-breaking, &c. She had been twice in an asylum for periods of two and three years.

7714. M. Æt 18.—Stealing clothes. No insane record. Sane on admission. After 14 days symptoms of slight eccentricity appeared, but no serious symptoms for six months, when there were outbreaks of violence with serious delusions.

9875. F. Æt 30.—Wilful damage. No insane record. Prisoner has 100 convictions recorded for drunkenness, and damage, &c. Constantly liable to violent outbursts of temper. Was removed September 1893 to Rainhill asylum: from which discharged after a year's detention. Has been three times convicted since discharge.

12,327. F. Æt 32.—Infanticide. Insanity after childbirth.

14,850. F. Æt 31.—Infanticide. Insanity after childbirth.

MAIDSTONE.

96. M. Æt 25.—Indecent assault. No insane record. Kept under observation for two months from date of admission. Certified as insane shortly after trial; [though evidently insane before it].

1262. M. Æt 26.—Arson. Previously reported strange. Mental condition on admission "variable." Five times previously convicted. Frequent outbreaks of violence and insubordination in prison, treated by "separate cell." Signs of insanity a year after admission; certified insane 17 months after admission.

486. M. Æt 53.—Wounding. No insane record. Sound on admission before trial; no symptoms of insanity, but believed to have committed offence while under delirium tremens. Detained at Queen's pleasure.

NEWCASTLE.

1521. M. Æt 21.—Fraud. Insane record. Obviously imbecile on admission. It appears strange that certificate of insanity should have been delayed for two months.

NORTHALLERTON.

94. F. Æt 55.—Housebreaking and theft. Insane record. Was kept in prison six months, but in the opinion of the medical officer "was not responsible for her actions" during this time.

NORTHAMPTON.

4651. M. Æt 45. Unlawful wounding. No insane record. This prisoner, in the opinion of the medical officer, was suffering from epileptic mania at the time of admission, and presumably when offence was committed. But the medical officer's view was not accepted by judge at assizes. During imprisonment further accesses of the disease occurred, and he was removed to an asylum. While in prison he was treated as an insane person.

NORWICH.

6760. M. Æt 33.—Larceny (after felony). No insane record. "Weak" on admission, and kept for a time under observation, then allowed to go to an ordinary cell. After two months delusions occurred and he was found to be suffering from general paralysis.

PORTSMOUTH.

435. M. Æt 19.—Arson. No insane record. Frequent previous convictions. During previous imprisonments destructive habits were noticed, but kept in check. On last occasion they became more evident, and after three months of imprisonment he was certified insane.

READING.

694. M. Æt 22.—Soldier striking superior officer. No insane record. Health good on admission. After six months' imprisonment he was frequently punished for prison offences. After 13 months delusions appeared, and he was certified insane.

RUTHIN.

24. M. Æt 35.—Poisoning river. No insane record. Health good on admission. Religious mania and attempted suicide after 37 days.

107. M Æt 30.—Wounding with intent. No insane record. Medical officer saw no sign of insanity. But on trial ordered to be detained at Queen's pleasure.

SHEPTON MALLET.

534. M. Æt 57.—Theft. No insane record. Sane on admission, though peculiar and excitable. After three months acute mania occurred.

SHREWSBURY.

498. M. Æt 34.—Attempted rape. Record of insanity. Melancholic on admission. Symptoms speedily aggravated. After a year certified insane by prison doctor and another, but Visiting Committee would not countersign. Second certificate signed a month afterwards; removed to asylum. It appears that he had been in this asylum previously for many years.

STAFFORD.

1394. M. Æt 19.—Shop-breaking. No insane record. Sane on admission. No symptoms for two months; then sudden excitement with delusions. These recurred at intervals. Six months after conviction certified as insane.

7846. M. Æt 43. — Incorrigible rogue. No asylum record, but suspected insanity. A man of low mental type, 25 times convicted of petty offences. Gradually got worse enough to be certified.

SWANSEA.

35. M. Æt 40.—Unlawful wounding. Insane on admission. Detained at Queen's pleasure.

WANDSWORTH.

9111. M. Æt 48.—Found in an enclosed yard. No insane record. Health good on admission. No morbid symptom for two months. On second-class labour. Then symptoms of excitability showed themselves, with self-abuse; soon became acutely maniacal and was removed to asylum.

11,552. M. Æt 22.—Larceny. Doubtful as to insane record. Health apparently fair on admission, but speedily placed under observation. After two months marked delusions as to persecution appeared, and he was certified insane.

WARWICK.

602. M. Æt 17.—Obtaining money by fraud. Doubtful history. A deaf-mute of low type, congenitally imbecile.

WAKEFIELD.

7472. M. Æt 56.—Theft. No insane record. Health fair on admission. After various breaches of prison discipline, delusions characteristic of general paralysis appeared, and he was certified as insane.

9480. M. Æt 39.—Assault. Record of insanity: twice in asylum. Health good on admission. After four weeks, symptoms of melancholia appeared, but subsided. Two months afterwards symptoms were aggravated, and he was certified insane.

10,787. M. Æt 30.—Theft. No insane record. Noisy and destructive on admission. Condition fluctuated frequently, but was finally determined to be general paralysis.

WINCHESTER.

81/875. M. Æt 18.—Indecent conduct. No insane record. Sound on admission: well conducted for five months. Then morbid symptoms, for which placed under observation, and certified as acutely maniacal.

4592. M. Æt 25.—Felony. No insane record. Sound on admission, and so continued for 14 months. Then became strange in manner and was placed under observation. In a few weeks was certified insane. His disease was connected with self-abuse. His diet was liberal throughout, and he was working in association when the symptoms occurred.

9006. M. Æt 48.—Theft. No insane record. Sound on admission. After two months signs of derangement appeared. Soon the man became obviously insane. The medical officer thinks that development of seeds of insanity may be "hastened "by the introspection and self-communion in- "separable from any form of penal state and "surroundings."

9111. F. Æt 39.—Theft. No insane record. Peculiar manner on admission. Eight days afterwards placed under observation in hospital for signs of melancholia. These became aggravated and she was certified as insane. Considerable time was necessary, says the medical officer, in this as in other cases, to remove doubt as to malingering.

9483. F. Æt 30.—Obtaining by false pretences. No insane record. Peculiar on admission. At once placed under observation. After 23 days distinct religious delusions appeared and she was ultimately certified insane.

593. M. Æt 30.—Murder. Doubtful record of insanity. Profoundly prostrate on admission. Melancholia with stupor appeared. Removed to Broadmoor.

Note as to answer to Question 1433.

In reading over the evidence given by me before the Departmental Committee on Prisons, I find that the latter part of my answer to Question 1433 was not quite correct, owing to my imperfect recollection of the statements relating to the insanity of prisoners contained in Mr. Morrison's article in the "Fortnightly Review" for April last. I said that Mr. Morrison "made no "allowance for the difference of ages as between the "prison population and the outside population," and that "the rate per 1,000 for insanity, which he quotes, "deals with the population of children and infants, and "includes all ages."

Appendix VII.

The following is what I should have said, and does represent my views upon the article in question, which I have taken an opportunity of perusing afresh:—

"Mr. Morrison, in endeavouring to show that the ratio of insanity in prison is greater than outside, makes inadequate allowance for the difference of ages as between the prison population and the outside population. The rate per 10,000, which he quotes, includes young persons down to the age of 15. Now, young persons are not so liable to insanity as persons of more mature years, who have felt the worries and strains of life, and Mr. Morrison's comparison is, therefore, unfair to the prisons, seeing that the ratio of insanity among the general population is lowered by the rarity of insanity among persons below the age of early adolescence. If Mr. Morrison wished to make a comparison of the ratio of insanity in prisons with that of the general population, it is obvious that the comparison should have been between persons of the same ages in the two populations.

"I do not know why Mr. Morrison has drawn the line at the age of 15, but I desire to draw attention to the fact that the total number of young persons under the age of 16 in the whole of the local prisons of England and Wales on the 31st March 1893, as shown in the 16th Annual Report of the Commissioners of Prisons (a report which was accessible to Mr. Morrison) was only 124, while the number of prisoners aged 16 and over was 13,847. Of this fact Mr. Morrison makes no mention."

(See Question 1194.)

The high state of sanitary efficiency maintained at the present time in our convict prisons is well shown in the Blue Book for the year ending March 31, 1890. To all who are interested in the well-being of our convict population it will be a satisfaction to find that the death-rate is far below the death-rate of the rest of England and Wales.

It has been observed by those who have some knowledge of statistics, that this death-rate is entirely fallacious; that in a prison population there are no children, amongst whom the death-rate is very high; and that, if allowance were made in this respect, it would probably be found that the prison death-rate is as high, if not higher, than the death-rate for the rest of England and Wales. As there appeared to be some truth in this statement, I have set myself the task of investigating the matter fully, with the result that I find that the "corrected death-rate" does not vary to any great extent from the "recorded death-rate."

In order to obtain this "corrected death-rate" it is necessary to divide the prison population into age and sex-groups; to compare these age and sex-groups with the age and sex-groups of the population of England and Wales as given at the last census in 1881; from a comparison of these age and sex-groups, to find the "standard death-rate" of the prisons, i.e., what would be the number of deaths if there had been exactly the same death-rate in each prison age and sex-groups as was recorded for the rest of the population of England and Wales; and finally, to determine the "factor of correction," i.e., the number by which the recorded death-rate must be multiplied in order to correct the differences which exist between the age and sex-distribution of the two populations.

I have experienced considerable difficulty in making these calculations from the fact that the age-groups given in the Blue Book are differently arranged from those adopted by the Registrar-General. In the Blue Book the ages are grouped thus: from 16 to 21, from 21 to 30, from 31 to 40, ——, from 61 and upwards. The age-groups adopted by the Registrar-General are as follows: from 0 to 5, from 5 to 10, from 10 to 15, from 15 to 20, from 20 to 25, from 25 to 35, ——, from 75 and upwards. In order to arrive at anything like a correct result, it has been necessary to re-arrange one set of tables. It would have been easier to have re-arranged the prison tables, but the result would have been far from accurate, owing to the fact that the ages of the prison population between 20 and 25 are not given, nor is there any further grouping of ages after 60. I have preferred therefore to re-arrange the England and Wales tables, as it was possible to assimilate these groups into other groups. That this arrangement is fairly accurate will be seen from a perusal of Table I., in which the composition of "a standard thousand" of the population of England and Wales, together with its death-rate, as given by the Registrar-General, is shown side by side with my re-arranged groups. It will be found that the difference between the two death-rates is only the small fraction ·24.

From the above table it will be seen that in a population of 5,130 convicts there were 64 deaths, which gives a death-rate of 12·4 per 1,000. To compare this rate with the rate for England and Wales, 21·43 per 1,000 is manifestly incorrect. There are no convicts under 16 years of age, whereas in the England and Wales tables it will be seen that the deaths amongst children under five years of age are more than a third of the total death-rate. All ages under 15 must therefore be eliminated. A correction must also be made for the variations in the respective age-groups. If the prison population were found to contain a considerable excess of young men, amongst whom the death-rate is low, and consequently a less proportion of old men, amongst whom the death-rate is high, as compared with the England and Wales tables, there would be an error greatly in favour of the prisons unless the necessary correction were made. This is done in Table III. It will be seen in Table I. that a standard thousand of the population of England and Wales contains 633 persons above the age of 15, and that the death-rate for this number is 11·82. In Table III. I have re-arranged these numbers into proportions per 1,000, in order to compare them with a thousand of the prison population, which is shown side by side in this table.

From Table III. it will be seen that the death-rate per 1,000 of the population of England and Wales, from 15 years and upwards, is 18·77, and it is with this number that the prison death-rate must be compared. Correction must also be made for age and sex distribution. This table shows that a standard thousand of the England and Wales population for ages over 15 is composed of 486 males and 514 females whereas in the case of the prisons a thousand is composed of 942 males and 58 females. In the one case, the excess of females over males is 28, and in the other the males exceed the females by 884. As the death-rate amongst males is greater than amongst females for nearly all ages, the necessity for this correction is apparent. It is effected by means of Cols. VII. and VIII. in the same table, where the number of deaths per 1,000 of the prison population are calculated at the England and Wales rates. The number so obtained, 18·39, is the "standard death-rate." By comparing it with the death-rate for England and Wales under Cols. III. and IV. of the same table, 18·77, it will be seen that the prison population has a slight advantage in its age and sex distribution over the population of England and Wales. In order then to obtain the corrected death-rate, the recorded death-rate must be raised to the proportion of 18·77 : 18·39. This is done more easily by means of the "factor of correction," obtained by dividing the death-rate for England and Wales for ages over 15, by the standard prison death-rate. The fraction $\frac{18·77}{18·39} = 1·02$ is this factor. The recorded death-rate, 12·4, multiplied by this factor will give the corrected death-rate = 12·64. This number, however, only compares it with the death-rate for England and Wales for ages over 15 years, viz., 18·77. A comparison with the total death-rate for England and Wales, 21·43, is obtained by the following simple rule-of-three sum—18·77 : 21·43 :: 12·64 : x. This number will be found to be "14·41," which is the corrected death-rate required.

APPENDIX VII.

The death-rates (recorded and corrected) for the past 10 years are given in Table IV., from which it will be seen that the death-rate for last year was 1·19 per 1,000 above the average of the past 10 years.

TABLE IV.

Year.	1881.	1882.	1883.	1884.	1885.	1886.	1887.	1888.	1889.	1890.	Average for the 10 Years.
"Recorded" death-rate per 1,000	13·5	11·9	10·69	10·26	10·7	8·63	11·3	10·6	13·84	12·4	11·38
"Corrected" death-rate per 1,000	15·66	13·85	12·2	11·94	12·5	10·04	13·15	12·32	16·16	14·41	13·22

The question naturally arises, how is this low rate of mortality to be accounted for? It is certainly not due to the superior physique of the convicts themselves. On the contrary, their vitality is more or less lowered by the vicious lives they have led. Some other cause must therefore be sought for. An examination of the Mortality Table in the Blue Book shows that there was not a single death from the principal zymotic diseases. The zymotic death-rate for England and Wales for the 10 years ending 1880 was 3·38 per 1,000. Add this number to the corrected prison death-rate and it would be raised to 17·79 per 1,000. This would bring it almost exactly to the death-rate for England and Wales for the year 1890, when the death-rate was 17·9 per 1,000.

The absence, then, of zymotic or preventible disease is the chief reason why the mortality-rate in our convict prisons is so low. There are other influences at work which assist in the same direction, such as the absence of intoxicating liquors, a good and sufficient supply of food, the enforced regularity of the life which is led, &c., but these influences are in a great measure counterbalanced by the depressing conditions which a life of penal servitude must entail. Were this low rate observed for only one year, it might be attributable to accidental causes, and would possess but little significance, but when we see it maintained year after year, the inferences to be drawn are absolutely conclusive. It proves that the sanitary surroundings of our convict prisons are better than is the case throughout the country generally, and that the low mortality-rate is due to the exclusion of preventible disease.

The question which these statistics suggest is whether the death-rate of the country generally might not, by improving the sanitary conditions under which our artisans and labourers live, be reduced approximately to the rate observed in our convict prisons. That great improvements in this respect have been effected since the passing of the Public Health Act of 1875, is proved by the gradual lowering of the death-rate from 20·5 per 1,000 in 1880 to 17·9 per 1,000 in 1890. Great strides have been made during the past few years in the Department of Sanitary Science, by the constitution of examining boards conferring diplomas in public health, and by the appointment of medical officers of health to most of our urban and rural districts. Many of our large towns have spent vast sums of money in carrying out sanitary improvements, with the result that the local death-rate has, in many instances, been lowered to an almost incredible extent. There are, however, defects in our sanitary service that appear to me to urgently call for further legislation. In the first place, the conditions under which a medical officer of health holds his appointment is far from satisfactory. He is elected by a local board, and is subject to re-election at the end of a specified term, generally three years, so that his tenure of office is most insecure. Under such circumstances it is hardly to be wondered at if he refrain, almost unconsciously, from suggesting sanitary improvements which, however advisable, might be obnoxious, on the score of expense, to certain members of the board, as, by so doing, he would imperil his re-election when his term of office expired. By this I do not intend to suggest that medical officers of health do not perform their duties conscientiously, for I believe that a more conscientious and painstaking body of men does not exist; but I do maintain that the conditions under which they hold their appointments are of such a nature as seriously to hamper them in the performance of their duties. To such an extent is this sometimes the case, that good men have resigned their appointments because they have not been able to perform their duties in accordance with the dictates of conscience. In our larger urban and rural districts they are fairly well paid; they are required to devote the whole of their time to the duties of the office; and they are also required to possess a diploma in public health. In our smaller towns the case is different, and it is here that further legislation is so much needed. Each has, as a rule, its own medical officer of health; the duties he is called upon to perform are very trifling, and the remuneration he receives is in proportion to those duties. The salary given is sometimes as low as from 15*l.* to 30*l.* per annum. No one, under such circumstances, can be expected to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the office, and the appointment is therefore usually held by a local private practitioner. He is not required to possess any diploma in public health, and he may, therefore, have only a very superficial knowledge of sanitary science, and be consequently quite unfitted for the post. It is impossible that, under such conditions, the duties can be performed satisfactorily, as those duties must often clash with the private interests of some of his best patients. To effect sanitary improvements on anything like an extensive scale necessitates the outlay of a considerable amount of capital, and a corresponding increase in the county or borough rates. Local boards, as well as private individuals, are very susceptible where it is a question of expense, and no medical man in private practice could insist upon such an increased expenditure without incurring grave risk of serious loss to his practice. It can hardly be expected, therefore, that under such conditions, sanitary improvements of any magnitude will be carried out or even suggested.

To remedy these defects in our sanitary system I would venture to suggest that the appointment of medical officers of health should not rest with county councils or local boards, but should be vested in one central authority, the Local Government Board, under whose direction the medical officer of health should act, and to whom alone he should be responsible. Every large town should, as is now generally the case, have its own medical officer of health, and the counties should be mapped out into districts of manageable size, each containing about 100,000 inhabitants, into which the smaller towns should be merged, and each presided over by its own medical officer of health. No medical man holding one of these appointments should be allowed to practice privately, but should be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of his office, and it should be a sine quâ non that he possess a diploma in public health. At the same time the office should be well paid; the appointments should be permanent, and there ought to be a retiring pension, such as is granted to all branches of the Civil Service.

These remarks are not made in any spirit of adverse criticism against the Local Government Board, as this body is quite powerless to remedy the defects to which I have referred. It is only by further legislation that the sanitary service of the country can be placed on a satisfactory footing. By carrying out some such reform as I have briefly foreshadowed, the hands of the Local Government Board would be greatly strengthened. They would have the control over a body of men upon whom they could rely that all needful sanitary work would be efficiently carried out. The position of medical officers of health would be greatly improved. They would be able to perform their duties fearlessly, and would have the satisfaction of knowing that provision would be made for them when they became incapacitated from performing their duties, either through age or ill-health. Sanitary improvements would be insisted upon in our smaller towns and rural districts, and it would become possible for the general death-rate to be lowered approximately to the rate observed in our convict prisons for the past 10 years. [Question 10,759.]

The statements contained in the Report of the Chaplain of Dartmoor Prison, 1892–3, and 1893–4, were well considered by the Directors of Convict Prisons, who informed the chaplain that, as there is at Dartmoor Prison a Protestant scripture reader, besides the chaplain, the Directors considered that one chaplain should be able to do the duty.

The matter was referred to in a question by Admiral Field in Parliament on the 20th November 1893, and replied to by the Secretary of State as follows:—

"There is at Dartmoor a Protestant scripture reader besides the chaplain, and it is the opinion of the Directors of Convict Prisons that this is sufficient."

Paper handed in by Captain Stopford (Question 349).

Memorandum by Sir E. Du Cane on Insanity in Local Prisons.

The true explanation of the number of cases of insanity recorded in prison returns and of the increase of them in recent years has been repeatedly pointed out.

So long ago as March 1884, the Medical Inspector reported on the composition of the mental cases in local prisons, and said that:—

"No less than 621 persons in a doubtful mental condition were committed to prison in England and Wales during the year 1883 expressly for medical observation, and for report from medical officers. I have reason to think that some of these persons were known to be of unsound mind, and that, in order to make the proceedings regular, from the police point of view, a charge of some kind was made against them. Injustice and injury occasionally result from this procedure.

"Of persons who are observed by the medical officer to be of defective or unsound mind on reception into the prison, there were as many as 149 in the local prisons of England and Wales during the year 1883. This number is made up—

"(a.) Of persons who are actually sentenced to imprisonment because they are of unsound mind. As these persons are committed under some charge I could not prove the truth of this statement, but I have no doubt of the fact whatever.

"(b.) Of persons who are for the first time recognised as being of defective or unsound mind by the medical officer, as the result of his examination in the reception ward."

The increase in the practice of committing insane prisoners was referred to and explained in the Commissioners' Reports (Seventh for 1883-84, Eighth for 1884-85, and Twelfth for 1888-89), and in the Notes of the Medical Inspector published as an Appendix to the 12th Report of the Commissioners.

If the prison treatment drove people mad, most of the cases would arise among those who were longest subject to it, but, on the contrary, only one case occurred after a year in prison.

In August 1889 the Medical Inspector also remarked:—

"I find that governors generally are of opinion that the increase of lunatics received into local prisons is due to the fact that magistrates generally act as advised by their clerks, who, since 1884, have been able to save themselves a great deal of clerical work by advising that persons who appear to be lunatics should be remanded to prison to be dealt with as criminal lunatics, that is to say, to be sent through prison to the asylum, instead of, as before, directly to the asylum by the magistrates. They thus save themselves a great deal of trouble in the way of getting the requisite certificates, &c."

The statistics of suicides, so far as they throw light on this subject, are entirely in favour of the period since the prisons have been under Government.

In the five years before 1878 there were 86, or 17 per annum, in an average population of 18,682. In the last five years 43, or 8·6 per annum, in an average population of 14,031. The largest part of these occurred among untried or just sentenced prisoners, and therefore have no connexion with prison discipline.

EXTRACT from APPENDIX No. 13 to the 12th REPORT of the PRISON COMMISSIONERS (1888-9) referred to above.

The total number of cases of insanity during the year was 349.* Of these, 210 were certified in the ordinary manner, and were removed to asylums. Five recovered in prison; 5 remained in prison (not being yet certified) at the end of the year; 3 died; 1 certified case had not yet been removed; and 125 (who had been remanded to prison for observation) were not returned after being brought up under remand, with report of insanity. The Commissioners have no official information as to what became of this last group of cases, but there is reason to believe that the great majority were sent to asylums, while a few were discharged to the care of friends.

Among the cases of insanity (59 in number) reported as originating in prison, the first symptoms appeared within 14 days of reception in 16 instances; and it is highly probable that although insanity was not immediately recognised, yet that it really existed on reception in a majority if not the whole of these cases. Of the remaining 43 cases, many are entered as having been in an "unstable," "weak," "deranged," "disturbed," "moody," "excitable," "morose," "peculiar," "dull," "uncertain," or "strange" condition of mind on reception, and it is doubtful whether in more than some six or eight out of the total of 349 cases the unsound state of mind really commenced in prison.

* This number does not include a considerable number of prisoners of weak or impaired intellect who cannot, however, be certified to be insane.

The following table shows the number of sentenced prisoners who were found to be insane upon reception into prisons:—

It is evident from these figures that insane and irresponsible persons have been dealt with as though sane and responsible; that is to say, they have been sent to prison under sentence. In London the sending of insane persons to prison under sentence is in a great measure prevented by making use of Holloway Prison as a place in which accused persons of doubtful sanity can be observed and tested. During the year ended March 31st, 1889, as many as 401 prisoners were remanded to Holloway Prison for observation and report to magistrates as to their state of mind. Of these, 215 were reported to be sane; 107 were reported to be of weak or impaired intellect; and 85 were reported to be insane. These cases were all dealt with and disposed of at the police courts or sessions.

It is noteworthy that the number of insane persons sent to prison has increased during the last four or five years. Persons who ought to be in asylums are wandering at large and are daily committing offences against life or property. In their forty-third annual report, the Commissioners of Lunacy observe that "there can be but little doubt that during the last few "years many medical men have, owing to fear of "litigation, refused to certify to the insanity of persons "requiring care and treatment; and that this circumstance has tended to prevent many insane persons "being legally dealt with and treated." It is to be feared that many of these persons wander about to prey upon the community, and are not dealt with as lunatics until they have committed some offence and have found their way into prison.

The early treatment of mental disease is of great importance, not only to the unhappy victim of the disease, but to the community, and it remains to be seen whether this desirable object will be promoted by legislation now in progress. If the treatment of the disease in an early stage—the only stage at which it is usually successful—should be discouraged, the number of insane prisoners may be expected to increase. Even as matters now stand, the number of insane persons committed to prison is large, as already stated and as shown in the Appendix.

The local prisons of England and Wales are at present used to some extent as hospitals for the treatment of mental and bodily disease; but as they are not intended for or adapted to that purpose, it is advisable that the practice in vogue should be discontinued as far as possible.

H.M. PRISON, HOLLOWAY.

Details concerning the Ordinary Discipline Staff (Males).

The ordinary discipline staff consists of—

10 warders,
31 assistant warders.

9 are specially approved for duty at Newgate when prisoners are located there each month for the Central Criminal Court Sessions.

2 are specially approved as attendants in the ward where mentally affected prisoners are located.

1 is specially approved as identification officer to attend police, sessions, and assize courts to prove previous convictions.

6 are appointed to meet all contingencies in staff such as absences through sickness, or annual leave, escorts, sessions sitting simultaneously with Central Criminal Court, &c., in lieu of temporary officers not now sanctioned for such purposes as heretofore.

The daily average male population for the year 1893–4 was 363.

Taking the 43 less 9 for Newgate = 34. This gives a staff of just over 9 per cent. for Holloway.

Taking the 43 less 9 for Newgate and two nurses and one identification officer = 31. This gives a staff of about 8½ per cent. for Holloway.

Taking the 43 less 18* shown above = 25. This gives a staff of about 7 per cent.

The distance from Holloway to Newgate is about four miles, creating extra demand on the officers' time in getting to and from Newgate on duty, at least 50 minutes would be occupied in the journey each way, which time is therefore lost to Holloway in the duty of as many officers as have to attend at Newgate, in addition to the nine, which would not be so were Newgate not so far.

Everard S. Milman,
Governor.

Letter from Sir James Graham, 16th December 1842, to the Commissioners for the Government of Pentonville Prison.

Whitehall, 16th December 1842.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have the honour of transmitting to you copies of two despatches addressed by Lord Stanley to the Governor of Van Diemen's Land, which contain instructions for carrying into effect the classification of convicts, according to a plan to be adopted in the penal colony.

This plan has been carefully considered by Her Majesty's servants: it has received their deliberate sanction; and if the consent of Parliament be obtained, it will be carried into immediate execution.

In framing this measure of regulated punishment, we have not overlooked its connexion with the prison which is placed under your superintendence; and I avail myself of this opportunity for laying before you the view which I take of the use to be made of Pentonville Prison, and of the mode in which it may be rendered the most effective auxiliary to an improved scheme of convict discipline.

It is useless to discuss the abstract question, whether under any regulation a prison can supply the means of reforming the character of hardened offenders. It is enough to observe that the limited number which the Model Prison can contain will, in the hope of reformation, be generally confined to those who are convicted of their first offence, and whose age is between 18 and 35.

Considering the excessive supply of labour in this country, its consequent depreciation, and the fastidious rejection of all those whose character is tainted, I wish to admit no prisoner into Pentonville who is not sentenced to transportation, and who is not doomed to be transported.

The convict, on whom the discipline might have produced the most salutary effect, when liberated and thrown back on society here, would still be branded as a criminal, and would have an indifferent chance of a livelihood from the profitable exercise of honest industry. His degredation and his wants would soon obliterate the good impressions he might have received, and by the force of circumstances which he could not control, he would be drawn again into his former habits; he would rejoin his old companions, and renew the career of crime.

Not so the convict transported from Pentonville. The chain of former habits would be broken; his early associations would be altered: a new scene would open to his view, where skilled labour is in great demand, where the earnings of industry rapidly accumulate, where independence may be gained, and where the stain of tarnished character is not quite indelible.

This is the favourable position for ripening the fruit of improved prison discipline; this is the best chance for turning to account the instruction given in useful manual labour; this is the prospect which will revive hope in the bosom of the prisoner, which will confirm his good resolutions, and which will stimulate him to energy and to virtue.

I propose, therefore, that no prisoner shall be admitted into Pentonville without the knowledge that it is the portal to the penal colony; and without the certainty that he bids adieu to his connexions in England, and that he must look forward to a life of labour in another hemisphere.

But from the day of his entrance into the prison, while I extinguish the hope of return to his family and friends, I would open to him fully and distinctly the fate which awaits him, and the degree of influence which his own conduct will infallibly have over his future fortunes.

He should be made to feel that from that day he enters on a new career. The classification of the convicts in the colony, as set forth in Lord Stanley's despatch, should be made intelligible to him. He should be told that his imprisonment is a period of probation; that it will not be prolonged above 18 months; that an opportunity of learning those arts which will enable him to earn his bread, will be afforded under the best instructors; that moral and religious knowledge will be imparted to him as a guide for his future life; that at the end of 18 months, when a just estimate can be formed of the effect produced by the discipline on his character, he will be sent to Van Diemen's Land, there, if he behave well, at once to receive a ticket of leave, which is equivalent to freedom, with the certainty of abundant maintenance, the fruit of industry; if he behave indifferently, he will be transported to Van Diemen's Land, there to receive a probationary pass, which will secure to him only a limited portion of his own earnings, and which will impose certain galling restraints on his personal liberty; if he behave ill, and if the discipline of the prison be ineffectual, he will be transported to Tasman's Peninsula, there to work in a probationary gang, without wages, deprived of liberty, an abject convict.

This is the view which should be presented to the prisoner on the day when he enters Pentonville; this is the view which should never be lost sight of, either by him or by those in authority over him, until the day when he leaves the prison for embarkation; and when, according to the register to be kept of his conduct, the governors will determine in which of the three classes he shall be placed.

It will be open to the Commissioners, at any period of the imprisonment, to report to the Secretary of State cases which appear to them hopeless from the incorrigible character of the offenders, or where failing health or any other circumstances may render immediate removal from the prison desirable; and the Secretary of State will exercise his discretion in each case, with respect to the future destiny of the prisoner.

My wish is that Pentonville shall be for adults what Parkhurst now is for juvenile offenders—a prison of instruction and of probation, rather than a gaol of oppressive punishment; excepting that the more severe discipline of the separate system is in Pentonville applied to those of riper years, while the tender youth at Parkhurst is not exposed to the full rigour of this salutary discipline.

But the same classification in the penal colony is held out as the object of hope and fear to the inmates of both prisons; the same moral agents will be employed —the same stimulants—the same correctives.

Eighteen months of this discipline appear to me ample for its full application. In that time the real character will be developed, instruction will be imparted, new habits will be formed, a better frame of mind will have been moulded, or the heart will have been hardened, and the case will have become desperate.

The period of imprisonment therefore, will be strictly limited to 18 months. At the expiration of this term your recommendation will be transmitted to the Secretary of State, which will fix the class to which the convict will belong on his arrival in Van Diemen's Land. You will be mindful of the extent of discretionary power thus intrusted to you, which will have the effect either of aggravating or of diminishing for years the punishment of a large body of criminals. You will use every precaution to prevent the operation of favour or caprice in the reports, which will decide or influence your judgment on the character and merits of each prisoner; recollecting always that on your decision his fate in the penal colony will almost entirely depend.

I might enlarge on other points and descend to minute details of management, but I rely implicitly on your prudence and good judgment; and I trust that the great experiment committed to your care will be conducted with firmness, tempered by mercy; and that, combined with the new arrangements of graduated punishment in the colony, it may be blessed with success, and not only by example prevent the commission of crime, but reclaim from the error of their ways thousands of unhappy criminals who, without your benevolent exertions, would have fallen the hopeless victims of depravity.

I have the honour to be, with great respect,
My Lords and Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) J. R. G. Graham.

The Commissioners for the Government of Pentonville Prison.

LETTER from ADMIRAL TINKLAR, Governor of H.M Prison, Birmingham.

H.M. Prison, Birmingham,
SIR, February 22, 1895.

IN answer to a letter which I have this day received from the Secretary to your Committee, I have the honour to place before you certain views which I hold with reference to the local prison system as applied during my service, making a few references to its working under the late authority and the present Imperial one. These views by no means express all that I hold, but they can be amplified at your pleasure.

Briefly, under the present system the diets are not materially altered, but the distribution of the hard labour has been so altered that there is now very little difference between this work and simple imprisonment. The former are employed for the first month only (really 21 days) in association, such as treadwheel and stone-yard, and for the rest of their sentence in cellular occupation (in other words "isolated"). Why should they not work throughout in association under proper supervision?

I am further of opinion that crank labour, unremunerative grinding of wind whilst (in separation) in cells is degrading and contrary to the spirit of the age. I would encourage prison industries in every direction, so that in suitable cases a prisoner might expiate his offence in prison and be prepared to meet the world afresh with a new trade at his command if necessary.

I disapprove entirely of children under the age of 13 years being sent to prison and would even raise the limit to 14 years.

The mark system has my approval but it requires thorough revision and extension. As at present applied it is crude and imperfect. The maximum can be earned in about six months, after which the encouragement of industry and moral improvement appear to have been lost sight of. I have in my mind an elaboration of this system, somewhat like what existed under the old authority, which is far too long to include in a rough memorandum.

I think the introduction of plank beds compares unfavourably with hammocks, which were suspended some distance from the floor, and which are much warmer, especially in winter.

The attempts at educating illiterate prisoners are too faulty and limited.

The governor's position has been materially altered as a disciplinarian. He is now allowed the least possible amount of discretion in discharge of what should be his actual duties. For instance, witness the complaint of "overcrowding of prisons." Formerly he used to suggest whenever he thought removal necessary. Last year this was taken out of his hands, and I venture to say with bad results.

The abolition of the rank of deputy governor in certain prisons is a mistake, so also, the substitution of "chief warder in charge" is a retrograde step; notwithstanding which it is probably desirable, where a man shows exceptional talent and refinement in dealing with prisoners, that he should be given the opportunity of rising.

The Commissioners have done a great deal for the officers, except the chief warder, whom I think is in local prisons Class I. and II. and III. most inadequately paid. It is also worthy of consideration whether it would not be desirable to allow every assistant warder to become a warder after 10 years, with the pay and allowances appertaining thereto, subject to the recommendation of the governor as to his fitness in every respect. Temporary officers even now are employed in certain circumstances which might be entirely obviated by increasing the permanent staff to 7 per cent., any less per-centage is entirely inadequate for many reasons which I am in a position to explain.

Objections are numerous why contracts should be local, not central. They could be accepted after examination of tenders and samples, by the Visiting Committee, subject to approval by Her Majesty's Commissioners. For instance, a short time since some oatmeal was supplied which was inferior in quality, a sample was sent to the Home Office for analysis and reported fit for use. It so happened that subsequently the contractor's traveller called, condemned it, said it should not have been sent, and forwarded a fresh consignment. All this delay would have been avoided by having a "local" contractor, and the prisoners would not have had inferior gruel (their staple food) for a week.

From the foregoing, in all its several bearings, I cannot but feel that if the Visiting Committee had greater financial and plenary powers and the governor extended discretion, and also that the inspection of prisons be made by a Commissioner three or four times a year, instead of monthly by an inspector, it might materially reduce the superior and clerical staff at the Home Office whilst adding greatly to the efficiency of the local prison service generally.

In order to reply by return of post must be my apology for this rough sketch.

I am Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. TINKLAR, Governor.

The Rt. Hon. H. J. Gladstone, M.P.,
Chairman,
Departmental Committee, Prison Service.

A.

MEMORANDUM by Captain SCHUYLER on certain points dealt with in Colonel GARSIA's evidence.

A brief account of my connexion with Wormwood Scrubs Prison will be the best means of enabling the Prison Committee to form a proper estimate of Colonel Garsia's allegations in reference to the management of that prison.

1. I was asked by the Prison Commissioners to take charge of the prison on the 18th of September 1891, and I remained in charge for 85 days. Before I went over from Wandsworth to take charge I was well aware of the fact that the prison was in an unsettled and unsatisfactory condition. This fact was known to all the officials in the prison.

When I arrived I was at once informed by the chief warder that the prisoners were in a state of insubordination. He has since confirmed this statement in exactly the same words. In further corroboration of this statement, I found on looking at the Punishment Book that a few days before my taking charge no less than nine (9) serious cases had come before the Visiting Committee for trial, of which six (6) were for striking officers. This is an unprecedented thing under normal circumstances. I also found that there had been an outbreak in the exercise yard in which the prisoner J. E. took part, and finally I found that in consequence of this outbreak all the warders were ordered to carry their truncheons when exercising the prisoners.

2. In these circumstances I set to work to discover the causes which were provoking this unsatisfactory state of affairs, and I found they could be traced to three heads:—(1.) Chapel. (2.) The warders. (3.) The punishments.

During the whole time I was there I directed my energies to the removal of these causes as far as it was in my power to remove them, and to mitigate them when it was not in my power to remove them. The actual steps taken by me I will now mention in detail—

(1.) Chapel.—I found that a great deal of the insubordination and discontent among the prisoners was to be traced to the fact that they were excluded from the public exercise of their religion in chapel. A reference to the Punishment Book will show that within a period of about six weeks prior to my taking charge of Wormwood Scrubs Prison Colonel Garsia punished no less than about 70 prisoners by excluding them from the religious services. On looking at the Act of Parliament, I had grave doubts as to the legality of this punishment, and I know I am not alone in this doubt. It is a separate punishment which was practically unknown at Wandsworth, and, I believe, at many of the best conducted local prisons. In these circumstances I determined, cautiously, to remove this cause of discontent. When, therefore, applications were made to me by prisoners who had been excluded from chapel before I took charge, I acceded to 19 of their applications after careful inquiry into the merits of each case. Colonel Garsia's statement that I allowed all to go to chapel irrespective of their conduct is accordingly contrary to the fact and the official record. Further, the chief warder denies that he ever made such a statement to Colonel Garsia. Before leaving this point I must inform the Committee that one of the most irritating hardships in a cellular prison is to intensify the prisoner's solitude. And it is very significant that between the date of my leaving Wormwood Scrubs and the day of the second outbreak (a period of seven days) no less than 35 prisoners were punished by Colonel Garsia by being deprived of chapel. (See Punishment Book.)

(2.) Warders.—The second difficulty in connexion with the administration of the prison was undoubtedly the warders. A reference to the length of service of the assistant warders will show the Committee that about three-fourths of these officers had been in the prison service for less than 12 months, and many of them for only a few weeks. I am absolutely certain that some of these young officers were employed on duty in the convict hall, in fact, it would have been impossible to administer the prison without utilising their services at some time or another in this part of the prison.

(a.) I must call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the good order of a prison largely depends on the assistant warders. It is these officers who come most immediately and continuously into contact with the prisoners, and, unless they have had time to acquire a full knowledge of their duties and of the spirit of forbearance in which the multitudinous regulations affecting a prisoner have to be enforced, the prisoners are sure to suffer, and offences against prison discipline are sure to be serious.

(b.) Now I emphatically maintain that about three-fourths of these assistant wardens had only rudimentary ideas of their duties. Most of them did their best under the circumstances, but I was sometimes in the painful position of having to listen to charges against a prisoner when it was really the system which was at fault.

(c.) In this state of affairs my duty, and it was a very delicate and difficult one, was to mediate as far as possible between the warder and the prisoner; in other words, while supporting authority to avoid injustice.

I carried out this policy in the following manner:—On the one hand I dismissed (after careful investigation) every complaint, without exception, made by the prisoners against the warders (see Application Book); and on the other, in the case of reports by officers against prisoners, I had to inform more than one officer that the evidence of the prisoner must be listened to as well as his own. Many of the warders resented the idea of my listening to a prisoner at all, and did not seem to realise that it was my duty to administer justice with absolute impartiality.

(d.) In answer to the allegation of Col. Garsia that I stirred up the worst feeling between prisoners and prison officers, a statement which he says he had from the chaplain and chief warder, I have only to say that both these gentlemen emphatically deny having said anything of the kind.

(3.) Punishments.—The next cause of the condition of the prison was the punishments. On taking charge of the prison and looking at the Punishment Book, I was struck with the number and severity of the punishments, and I arrived at the conclusion that a great deal of the disaffection among the prisoners was arising from that cause. I at once determined to adopt the methods which had proved so successful at Wandsworth and in which I had been trained. A reference to the official returns (which I have appended to this memo.) will at once show that Col. Garsia's charge of laxity of punishment by me is not borne out and has no more foundation behind it than his other allegations. Let me briefly analyse these returns:—

(1.) In the first place it will be seen that in number the punishments inflicted by me at Wormwood Scrubs amounted in a daily average per 1,000 to 6·7. This number of punishments exceeds the number inflicted in convict prisons and at the neighbouring local prisons of Pentonville and Wandsworth.

(2.) In the second place, as regards the nature of the punishments, I find that I inflicted about as high a ratio of severe punishments as Pentonville, Wandsworth, and the convict prisons, and a decidedly higher ratio of other punishments. Whether, then, the amount of punishment inflicted by me is judged by the standard of the convict prisons or by the standard of the neighbouring local prisons, it will be found that the allegation of systematic laxity falls to the ground. Considering the anomalous circumstances of Wormwood Scrubs Prison in the light of my additional experience of prison administration, I feel convinced that the discipline of the prison could have been efficiently maintained with less punishment than I then inflicted.

It now remains for me to call the attention of the Committee to Colonel Garsia's ideas of prison punishment as measured by his practice.

On looking at his evidence I find that he sat by the Visiting Committee whilst a prisoner was being sentenced to illegal punishment (Question 6,449). I also find that when he was asked if he thought this illegal punishment was severe, he answered No. (Questions 6693–5). I find that he signed the Punishment Book for the execution of this illegal sentence.

Again when I look at the number and nature of the punishments inflicted by him (vide Returns appended) at Wormwood Scrubs during the 63 days he was in charge, I find that the number of his punishments far exceed the punishments of any of the prisons enumerated in the appended return.

I also find that they are much more severe in character.

Colonel Garsia's conception of what he is pleased to call laxity must be looked at in the light of these facts.

Finally the Committee must remember that the outbreaks did not occur during my administration of the prison, but occurred under Colonel Garsia's.

E. E. S. Schuyler,
Deputy Governor.

H.M. Prison, Wandsworth,
26th February 1895.

Inclosure to foregoing.—Note showing how the Appended Returns are made out.

The contents of these two tables are extracted from the official returns which I will now enumerate:—

(1.) The punishments in the convict prisons are taken from the Report of the Directors of Convict Prisons for 1891–2, Part I.

(2.) The punishments in Pentonville and Wandsworth Prisons are taken from the 15th Report of the Commissioners of Prisons.

(3.) The Punishments at Wormwood Scrubs Prison are taken from the Punishment Book for 1891. In extracting these punishments I have included all, and classified them under their proper heads.

(4.) The length of time I was in charge of Wormwood Scrubs Prison (viz., 85 days) from 18th September to 11th December 1891, can be ascertained by a reference to the Application and Punishment Book. The length of time Colonel Garsia was in charge (viz., 63 days) from August 4th to September 17th, and from December 12th to December 29th 1891, can be ascertained from the same sources.

OBSERVATIONS by COLONEL GARSIA on the foregoing MEMORANDUM by CAPTAIN SCHUYLER.

This memorandum is Captain Schuyler's own account of the methods by which he brought Wormwood Scrubs Prison into the state in which I found it on resuming charge on 12th December 1891. My perusal of it only confirms the opinion I then formed, and have expressed to the Committee. I adhere to every word of the evidence given by me on the 22nd November 1894, and I am ready to repeat it on oath.

Captain Schuyler joined at Wandsworth Prison, on probation as a deputy governor, on the 15th June 1891; and on the 18th September, or just three months after he had so joined, he took over the temporary charge of Wormwood Scrubs Prison, with which prison he had had no previous connection whatever, had no acquaintance with any of the officials, and was never even inside the walls. What, then, were his means of becoming well aware of the condition of Wormwood Scrubs Prison, and what credit is to be attached to his statement that "before he went over from Wandsworth "to take charge, he was well aware of the fact that the "prison was in an unsettled and unsatisfactory con-"dition, and this fact was known to all the officials in "the prison."

When he arrived at Wormwood Scrubs, he says "he "was informed by the chief warder that the prisoners "were in a state of insubordination." What did he do on being so informed? Did he at once report this alarming condition of things, as was his bounden duty, to the Commissioners, to whom he reported in writing his having taken over the charge? Did he record the fact in his journal, and did he bring it before the Inspector of Prisons? Further, did he test the truth of this alleged report of the chief warder? Did he ascertain that the prisoners were resisting authority, were defiant, and that they were beyond control? The answer is distinctly—No. He only reported about the drains and the corridors (see questions 3264 to 3268 of his evidence).

For corroboration of the alleged report of the chief warder, he says "he looked at the punishment book "and therein discovered—

(a.) "That a few days previously nine serious cases had come before the visiting committee for trial, of which six were for striking officers;

(b.) "That there had been an outbreak in the exercise yard in which the prisoner J. E. took part, and

(c.) "that, in consequence of that outbreak, all the warders were ordered to carry their truncheons when exercising the prisoners."

As to (a.):—The cases brought before the visiting committee were those which had occurred since the last monthly meeting of the committee, and which, by statute, could not be dealt with by the gaoler.

They were as follows:—

Breaking cell furniture - - -	3
Aiding a prisoner who assaulted an officer - - - - - -	1
Assaulting officers - - -	5

and the five last offenders were the most incorrigible prisoners in the prison, but not one of them was a penal servitude prisoner.

Against this number tried in September, there was but one case brought before the visiting committee in August, which shows how crime in as well as out of prison fluctuates.

As to (b.) the occurrence was as follows:—

Three prisoners were at exercise under an officer who checked two of them for talking, "J.E." and "S.P." One of these incorrigibles assaulted the officer—the other aiding him—who shook them off and was unhurt. There was no premeditation. There was no combination. It was a case of assault, pure and simple, which has happened in the best ordered prison over and over again, and will happen again and again, in spite of every precaution.

To call this "an outbreak of the prisoners in Wormwood Scrubs Prison" is a gross exaggeration.

As to (c.), the order for all officers to have their truncheons with them when on duty, and to carry them when superintending the exercise of prisoners, was made in consequence of my finding that the officers left their truncheons at their homes, instead of having them in the pocket provided in their trousers for the purpose.

In convict prisons, the officers superintending prisoners at exercise are posted at some distance from the prisoners, and invariably carry their truncheons. The officers are thus kept alert, and assaults are prevented.

Having regard to the class of prisoners at Wormwood Scrubs, viz., convicts, and prisoners under long sentences, a large number being ex-convicts, &c., I ordered, with the approval of the Commissioners, the practice which had prevailed at Wormwood Scrubs when a convict prison, to be carried out, with the result that officers became more alert, and there were no further assaults on officers supervising the exercise of prisoners.

Captain Schuyler says that six reports in one month for assaults on officers is an unprecedented thing under normal circumstances. On this I respectfully submit that the Committee would get more light from gentlemen of the experience of—

Sir E. Du Cane,
Captain Stopford,
Mr. Fagan, Mr. Wakeford } Ex-directors,
Captain Helby, Wandsworth,
Captain Harris, Portland, and other old governors who know how incorrect is the statement.

(2.) Captain Schuyler says "he set to work to dis- "cover the cause which was provoking this unsatis- "factory state of affairs,"—presumably "the state of "insubordination of the prisoners of which," he says, "he had been told," but which I again assert did not exist when I handed over the charge of the prison, and this is borne out by the statement in writing of the chaplain, Mr. Merrick, see his letter appended, paragraph 3; also the Annual Report of the Inspector, Major Griffiths, who reported (see page 96 of Part 2 of the Commissioners' Fifteenth Report: "The conduct of the "officers has been good. The conduct of the prisoners "has been generally good, but at one period of last "winter a certain number of convicts were very ill- "conducted."

Captain Schuyler says he found that the unsatisfactory state of affairs could be traced to three causes:—

(1.) Chapel;
(2.) The Warders;
(3.) The Punishments; and then he set to work and directed his energies to the removal of these causes.

(1.) Chapel.—He does not say how he arrived at his conclusion. Did he hold an inquiry and take evidence? Did he consult with the chaplain, Mr. Merrick? And on the point of law did he appeal to the Commissioners or the Inspector? To all of these the answer is clearly, No. He thinks it enough to say he found it so, and that he considered the punishment illegal—he, a novice without experience and without knowledge. He therefore allowed 19 prisoners, who were temporarily excluded by me from attending chapel for misconduct, to attend, and he would not order any prisoner who misbehaved in chapel to be temporarily excluded therefrom. Yet he says that it is contrary to fact to say that he allowed all prisoners to go to chapel, irrespective of their conduct in chapel. He further says that in 63 days I sentenced 70 prisoners to be kept from chapel. This is at the rate of one per diem out of a daily average of over 1,000 male prisoners; but he omits to mention this important fact, that the seating accommodation for male prisoners in the Protestant chapel was 80 to 100 less than the number of male Protestant prisoners in the prison, and that when he was allowing the ill-behaved in chapel to attend the services there was an average of 80 prisoners (presumably well conducted) locked in their cells and kept from the services for want of seats in the chapel. I accept Captain Schuyler's figures as correct, seeing that he has had all the books and records of Wormwood Scrubs to carefully examine. Then he further says that, in the seven days ended 19th December 1891, after I had resumed charge, I sentenced 35 prisoners to be kept from chapel for misconduct at the services. This goes to prove how his way of dealing with this offence acted—that it quintupled the offence.

I doubt, also, if Captain Schuyler can be aware that the punishment he mostly awarded, viz., "— days' close confinement in cell," deprived a prisoner not only of chapel, but of exercise, and doubly intensified the prisoner's solitude.

2. Warders.—I have furnished the Committee with a nominal list of the discipline staff of Wormwood Scrubs Prison, showing the length of service of each officer. I adhere to every word in the memorandum appended to the return; and will only add that when Captain Schuyler took over charge of Wormwood Scrubs Prison there were only nine assistant warders who, like himself, had less than four months' service, two others who had less than six months, one less than eight months, and eight over eight and less than 12 months, out of a total of 62 discipline officers.

Captain Schuyler reflects unfavourably on the officers, yet in (c) of his memorandum he states that he "dis- "missed, after careful investigation, every complaint, "without exception, made by the prisoners against "the warders."

This is strong testimony that the officers were not unfair or harsh, or inefficient, as he represents in (b), and it is hard to reconcile it with what he says in (c).

(d.) I made no allegation. I repeated what was officially reported to me by the chief warder. As to the chaplain, I can only ask the attention of the Committee to the attached paper, in which he, the Rev. Mr. Merrick, definitely records his knowledge and opinion of the occurrences at Wormwood Scrubs Prison during the period in question. The Committee have heard what the medical officer of the prison (Dr. Patmore) had to say, and I would be glad if they would call Major Clayton, now governor of Lewes Prison, who joined at Wormwood Scrubs on the 21st December as deputy governor, who, having succeeded me in the charge, can speak with authority.

(3.) Punishments.—Captain Schuyler says: "On "taking charge of the prison, and looking at the "punishment book, I was struck with the number and "severity of the punishments, and I arrived at the "conclusion that a great deal of the disaffection among "the prisoners was arising from that cause, and I at "once determined to adopt the methods which had "proved so successful at Wandsworth, and in which I "had been trained."

As I have explained to the Committee in evidence, the conditions of Wandsworth and Wormwood Scrubs prisons were entirely different, the former being an old-established prison, in which the prisoners were mostly under short sentences and none under penal servitude, whilst Wormwood Scrubs had been but 10 months converted into a local prison, and contained nearly 300 out of over 1,000 prisoners doing penal servitude, nine-tenths of the remainder being under long sentences, a large number being ex-convicts. In the face of this, in the face of the warning I gave this gentleman, who had been but three short months a prison official, he says he deliberately changed the discipline, reducing the punishment by half, and he is at the trouble to prove this by the returns he has prepared and appended, but which only shows the number of punishments, not the nature of them, or whether adequate or inadequate. I submit that this completely bears out what I stated in evidence as my opinion as to the cause of the condition of the prison when I resumed charge, and I venture to think the Committee will not desire me to go more fully into details. I would, however, repeat what I stated in evidence—question 6757—viz.: "that in a numerical "return the number of punishments to the number of "offences in no way shows whether the punishments "are severe, or the reverse, as one punishment may "really be more severe than three or even four for the "one offence."

Captain Schuyler next says: "It now remains for me "to call the attention of the Committee to Colonel "Garsia's ideas of prison punishment as measured by "his practice. I find that Colonel Garsia sat by the "Visiting Committee whilst a prisoner was being sen-"tenced to illegal punishment (Q. 6449). I also find "that when he was asked if he thought this illegal "punishment was severe, he answered "No" (Q. 6693–"5)."

A reference to the replies made by me to the questions quoted, and to my further evidence when called a second time before the Committee, will show that this is based on a complete misunderstanding of the facts. I have stated, and again state, that the sentence of the Visiting Committee, "42 days crank labour in P. cell," was not illegal, as the "P." did not stand for "punishment," but for "penal," which is an ordinary cell used in a convict prison for crank labour.

There is also no word in my evidence to show that I was asked if I thought that an award of 42 days in a punishment cell was severe (a punishment which would, if awarded, have been quite illegal), and that I replied "No." The questions and answers, 6693–6, do not relate to any particular punishment, but to the prisoner J. E.'s record of punishments generally, which, I pointed out, had been awarded not by the governor but by the Visiting Committee, and admitted that it was a heavy record, but that the offences were also heavy.

In conclusion, I venture to remind the Committee that it is Captain Schuyler who has voluntarily come forward after the lapse of three years and stated:—

"That there was an outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs prison immediately before he went there in September 1891, and a second outbreak ten days after he left, and that the causes of those outbreaks was the severity of the punishments inflicted by Colonel Garsia."

I have shown that there were not two outbreaks, but only the disturbance in the chapel on the 19th December 1891; that, in such disturbance, only prisoners under sentence of penal servitude were concerned, and that only eight of them actually took part; that no officer was struck, and that, of the eight prisoners concerned in it, only four were ever before me for misconduct, and only one received anything in the nature of punishment, viz., to be kept from chapel for seven days for misconduct in chapel.

ENCLOSURE No. 1 to foregoing.—LETTER from Colonel GARSIA to the Rev. Mr. MERRICK.

Home Office, 14th December 1894.

DEAR MR. MERRICK,

IT has been stated that there was an outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs Prison immediately before the 18th September 1891, that the so-called outbreak in the chapel on the 19th December 1891 was the second outbreak which occurred at Wormwood Scrubs during the year 1891. As you were chaplain of the prison at that time, and knew all that was going on, will you kindly reply to the following questions:—

(1.) Where and on what date did the first alleged outbreak occur; what was the nature of it; what prisoners were concerned, i.e., the number, and how and by whom was it quelled?

(2.) Were the officers of Wormwood Scrubs Prison discontented with their treatment during any of the three periods of my charge there in 1891?

(3.) What was the condition of the prison and prisoners when I went on leave on September 18th, 1891?

(4.) Were the officers contented with their treatment during the time I was absent on leave—viz., 18th September to 12th December 1891?

(5.) Was there a good feeling between the officers and prisoners when I resumed charge of the prison on December 12th, 1891, and did you ever mention to anyone that there was a bad feeling?

(6.) Did you know and mention to anybody that the officers were, prior to my return on December 12th, about to petition the Secretary of State or the Commissioners regarding the way they were being treated, and by whom?

(7.) Have you ever, in all your constant communications with prisoners at Wormwood Scrubs, had complaint made to you, or heard prisoners complain, of severity of punishment or ill-treatment at my hands?

Yours very truly,

(Signed) M. CLARE GARSIA.

ENCLOSURE No. 2 to foregoing.—LETTER from the Rev. Mr. MERRICK to Colonel GARSIA.

H.M. Prison, Holloway, N

DEAR COLONEL GARSIA, December 20, 1894.

WITH much pleasure I answer these questions.

(1.) There was only one outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs Prison during the time that I was chaplain there. That took place on the 19th of December 1891, the date which you have mentioned.

There was, however, on Sunday afternoon, November the 22nd, 1891, a "panic" in the prison chapel which might have resulted most seriously had I not been able happily to quell it almost immediately.

A female officer, R. M., on leaving her seat in the chapel after the service was over, took hold of the gas standard, and accidentally pulled it down. It fell upon her and she gave a little scream. This caused other women to scream, and a scene of great disorder and noise ensued.

I ran out of the vestry to see what was the matter; and I found the women shrieking and the men standing on their seats and shouting. I went into the body of the chapel, stood upon a seat, and told the men to sit down. They at once complied with my request, and I then narrated to them what had occurred, asking them to reverence the sanctuary and to go out quietly. They did so and the matter ended. I believe that no prisoner was reported on that occasion, and that no further notice was taken of that which was purely accidental, and which was in no way of the nature of an outbreak.

(2.) Most decidedly not, I cannot conceive of any governor laying hold of the esteem and almost affectionate regard of his officers more than you did.

(3.) The prison was well ordered, the prisoners were suggesting no grievances, and the officers were apparently happy in the performance of their duties.

(4.) I think not.

(5.) There was not a good feeling between the officers and prisoners when you resumed your charge of the prison, and I think that I mentioned the fact to you and I believe to the inspector also.

(6.) I did mention that the officers had said that they thought that "the attention of H.M. Commis-"sioners should be drawn to the state of the prison "discipline" prevailing before you again acted as governor.

(7.) No, certainly not.

It always appeared to me that when you dealt with the prison offences, the prisoners themselves seemed to regard your decisions as being extremely impartial and fair.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) G. P. MERRICK.

Memorandum accompanying a Nominal List of the Superior Officers and Discipline Staff (Male) at Wormwood Scrubs Prison from November 1890 to December 1891.

When the convicts were removed from Wormwood Scrubs and that establishment was constituted a local prison on 1st November 1890, a staff, consisting of seven officers above the rank of warder, 15 warders, and 23 assistant warders, was transferred from other local prisons, principally from Millbank and Holloway. In the course of the following year 11 vacancies from various causes occurred among these officers, which were filled by promotions and fresh appointments.

The staff was further increased during the year, as the prison filled up, by 18 more officers, viz.:—five old officers transferred from other prisons, and 13 new appointments.

As the convicts serving their first nine months gradually accumulated a suitable staff selected from the older officers was appointed to do duty in the hall which they occupied.

Memoranda by Sir E. Du Cane on certain points dealt with in Sir G. Lushington's evidence.

A.

Memorandum as to the Reconstruction of Dartmoor and Portland Prisons.

The reply given by Sir G. Lushington to Question 11,402 is calculated to give a very erroneous impression of the action or rather alleged inaction of the Directors of Convict Prisons.

I do not at all wish to contest the view that great benefit may be derived from independent criticism such as may be passed by a body like the visitors, but I object to the instance given to support that view because it does very great injustice to the Directors.

Anybody reading or hearing the statement in question would suppose that the Directors had kept the Secretary of State in ignorance of the inferiority of the cells at Dartmoor during the last 20 years at least, and therefore nothing had been done to bring the prison up to a modern standard.

In relating this to prove the inaction of the Directors Sir G. Lushington seems to have strangely forgotten, if he ever knew, that, as a matter of fact the great part of the cell accommodation at this prison has been reconstructed during the period named, and the inferior cells actually thrown out of use altogether. If this had been stated the matter would have appeared in quite a different light and the illustration would have lost all point.

There are 652 large and airy cells of modern construction in Dartmoor Prison, built between 1871 and 1885, besides accommodation for 82 in hospital, which, as Dartmoor has a number of invalid prisoners, is generally pretty full, so that without using the inferior cells or sleeping berths it can accommodate 732 prisoners.

Since 1885, or even before this, the population of the male convict prisons has been rapidly decreasing, it has fallen from 8,078 to 3,106; what number it will ultimately fall to cannot be foreseen, nor of course how it will be best to distribute them among the convict prisons, for this depends on Admiralty and War Department works and other considerations.

Common prudence therefore suggested that before building any more cells, we should let events develop and act according to circumstances, for by acting in a headlong manner, not only might a quantity of public money be thrown away, but the execution of other urgent works be delayed.

This course has been quite justified by events, for by 1892 the number of inmates of this prison had fallen to 562 including hospital inmates, and as we could accommodate 732, as above stated, without using any of the inferior cells, the provision was ample.

It must not be supposed, however, that all improvements at Dartmoor ceased, when the rebuilding of the cells was suspended. There were many other defects to be remedied to bring this old prison up to a modern level, such as better baths, workshops, cookhouses, &c. and above all, better quarters for the officers. These have been duly proceeded with, and like the cells, without the need of any stimulant from outside.

Some of the disused cells have lately been brought again into use for reasons I will presently give; but considering what the Directors had already done proprio motu it might surely have been assumed that, when the progress of the other works, already begun, admitted, they would continue the work of reconstructing the cells.

I might add, as showing that the Directors have been quite alive on this subject, that two other convict prisons have been replaced by new ones, and that the improvement of local prisons has been going on without ceasing since we took them over.

During the last two of three years great changes have taken place in the distribution of convicts on public works, largely owing to the completion of the naval works at Chatham and Portsmouth, on which they were engaged, and to the diminution of the number of convicts. These causes have led to the above-named prisons being closed and, as a consequence, to the increase of the population of Dartmoor Prison, and the re-occupation of some of the disused cells. It cannot be assumed that all of the cells thus re-occupied will be permanently required so as to justify new cells being built to replace them, because the diminution in the number of convicts is still going on and the distribution among the various convict prisons has to be considered; but besides these, there are other works of equal or greater importance already in course of execution, and of course it was proper to complete these before beginning new ones.

Among the works thus being executed are new quarters for the officers, to replace some which were very inferior and had been pulled down, and this is the most urgent need of the moment. I believe that a consideration of the foregoing facts will show that the directors have not been at all backward in improving Dartmoor Prison.

As the reconstruction of Portland Prison has been referred to, it is desirable that the circumstances relating to its original construction should be set out. It was built with the object of employing the convicts on the construction of the breakwater and the fortifications. These works were of a large enough character and certain to take so long a time as to justify the erection of a prison for the purpose. Having been finished, the works on which prison labour has since been employed have been of a much smaller type, and the Admiralty and War Department could not guarantee the employment of more than a very small number of convicts there for any length of time.

To rebuild the prison under these circumstances would be to spend a great deal of money and labour with the risk of having no employment for the inmates when it was completed, and, in view of the continued decrease of the convict prison population, having perhaps no inmates.

But the Directors two or three years ago obtained the sanction of the Secretary of State to a large part of the prison being pulled down with the object of very much improving the remainder. The prisoners' cells were, however, not the only part of the prison which having been built for temporary purposes, and according to a lower standard than now prevails, required consideration.

The provision of new quarters for the officers was at least equally urgent or more so, and this has been the part of the work on which we have been engaged.

There is another point which, perhaps, I ought to refer to. The erection of buildings affords excellent employment for convicts. They have to learn and practice a great variety of trades, and everybody would admit that it affords a legitimate field for their labour. We have been able to do at small expense an immense amount of useful and valuable work by this means, and providing health is duly regarded, these considerations are sufficiently important to outweigh the advantage of having the works completed more quickly if done by contract. It is obvious that when the number of convicts falls very low the facilities for executing large buildings by their labour are diminished and execution by contract may become necessary, but the same cause tends to make smaller buildings necessary, and may perhaps make them not necessary at all. As an illustration of this, I may point out that if the reconstruction of the convict prisons at Chatham and Portsmouth had been pressed on, say, 10 years ago, we should have spent hundreds of thousands of pounds, and by this time had no prisoners to put in them. I believe, therefore, that in the public interest much deliberation is appropriate before undertaking large reconstructions of prisons.

B.

MEMORANDUM as to the VIEWS of the COMMISSIONERS on USEFUL LABOUR for PRISONERS, in reply to Question 11,402.

The second instance given by Sir G. Lushington in order to show the inaction of the Prison Commissioners is also so phrased as to give a very inaccurate impression, much to their disadvantage, for he seems to suppose that they have been entirely indifferent to the advantage of useful labour in the abstract. This is diametrically opposed to the views they have strenuously endeavoured to carry out. The reports of the Prison Commissioners teem with references to their efforts to introduce new employments in the local prisons for this has from the first continuously occupied their earnest attention. But the remarks of the visiting committee referred to by Sir G. Lushington referred, not to prisoners' labour in general, but to the sort of labour called hard labour of the first class, namely, "treadwheel, crank, capstan, stonebreaking, or other "like kinds of labour," on which by the statute under which the prisons are governed, all male adult prisoners must during the first month be employed.

A committee, appointed by the Secretary of State, soon after the Prison Act of 1877 came into force recommended that the treadwheel should be adopted for this description of labour, or failing that, the crank The whole point for discussion in the Bristol case was whether the treadwheel or crank, thus by statute required during the first month, would have a greater moral effect if it produced some result, such as grinding corn, rather than producing no result. This is quite a different thing from what anybody would gather from Sir G. Lushington's evidence, in which nothing is said about its applying solely to the period of treadwheels.

The Commissioners have always considered that the practice of useful labour is one of the principal reformatory influences in the prison system, and prisoners are encouraged to look upon it as a reward and an improvement in their condition compared with penal labour.

Industrial labour may have a good moral and mental effect when it puts these faculties in operation, as when a prisoner can by exerting himself put out work of better quality or in larger quantity. But a prisoner who is one of a gang turning a treadwheel at a fixed rate, which by means of machinery works some millstones at a distance, has no scope for those faculties; his part is no more than that of the spring or weight which sets clockwork in motion, and it cannot make the smallest moral or mental difference to him whether the wheel turns some millstones or not. At some prisons where the flour is ground by the treadwheel the supply of flour for the prison is all obtained by a few hours of treadwheel labour in the week, and nobody would venture to say that directly the millstones are disconnected from the wheel the prisoners cease to derive some moral advantage which was infused into them before. Mill machinery is a costly addition to the expense of putting up a treadwheel, and a treadwheel with its house is a much more costly mode of furnishing first class hard labour than a crank in a cell. Moreover the mere grinding is only a small part of the expense of producing the flour, so that flour ground by treadwheel labour in a prison is often found to cost more than if bought straight from a contractor. In this case there would be no return of any kind, moral or pecuniary, for the expenditure involved. It is possible that the statutes which require that first class hard labour should be enforced might come into question, but this opens up other considerations, and has not, so far as I know, been proposed; at all events, it was not raised in the correspondence Sir G. Lushington refers to, nor does he suggest it. I may, however, perhaps be allowed to relate this personal experience:— In 1875, before the transfer of local prisons to Government, some question arose as to the period for which first class hard labour ought to be enforced. At that time, under the Act of 1865, it might be enforced during the whole of a sentence of imprisonment, and was compulsory during three months at least. The Secretary of State, Mr. Cross, did me the honour to consult me on the subject. I suggested that the three months might very well be reduced to one, and when the Prisons Bill was brought in this change was embodied in it. The rules subsequently made turned this period of penal labour to account as part of the progressive stage system, under which a prisoner is enabled by his good conduct and industry to improve his condition, for industrial labour is constituted a reward. This marked preference for industrial labour is quite inconsistent with the indifference which Sir G. Lushington unaccountably attributes to the Commissioners.

OBSERVATIONS by the PRISONS BOARD on the STATEMENTS made by "Mr. E.," a witness before the DEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON PRISONS, on 7th December 1894.

"Mr. E.," is an ex-convict, whose particulars are as follows:—

(1.) 4th May 1868, Central Criminal Court; burglary; seven years penal servitude, which he served at Portland Prison from 19th March 1869 to 7th October 1873, when he was licensed.

(2.) 8th February 1875, Middlesex Sessions; housebreaking; eight years penal servitude, which he served at Woking from 4th August 1875 to 16th January 1883, when he was licensed.

(3.) 8th January 1885, Maidstone Sessions; possessing housebreaking implements; 10 years penal servitude and seven years police supervision, which he served at Portsmouth from 16th July 1885 to 5th July 1892, when he was licensed with a remanet of 2 years 185 days.

During the first sentence he incurred no reports for misconduct, and was not punished. During the second sentence he was four times reported for misconduct, for which he was twice admonished and twice punished. During the third sentence he incurred no report for misconduct, and was not punished.

In the period covered by Mr. E.'s career there were two Royal Commissions, which went minutely into alleged prison grievances, visited the convict prisons, and fully informed themselves of what prisoners had to say as to their treatment.

(1.) Q. 9650. Witness alleges ill-treatment of a prisoner "D." at Portsmouth Convict Prison by warder Guest. Water thrown over him by order of the governor, Major Farquharson.

"D." cannot be traced, and there was no officer at Portsmouth Prison named "Guest," but an officer by name "Gast," now a principal warder at Parkhurst Prison; was a warder at Portsmouth Convict Prison at the time in question. Mr. Gast has been afforded the opportunity of seeing ex-convict "Mr. E.'s" statement, and has replied:—

"I am entirely at a loss to know what the ex-convict means. I have no recollection of anything of the kind occurring, and never at any time has the governor of any prison ordered me to throw water over a convict, neither have I done such a thing."

Major Farquharson, the then governor of the prison, has also seen "Mr. E.'s" statement, to which he has replied:—

"The statement made by the ex-convict is untrue so far as my ordering water to be thrown over any prisoner for refusing to leave the separate cells, and that I was looking out of a window and saw it done. At 8.30 a.m. I was always out on the works, I never got back to the prison 'till after 9 a.m., and then went into my office and opened the letters, &c. with the chief clerk; the office window faced the prison gate. Principal warder Gast was not strict with prisoners, he was rather too easy and free with them, not at all a likely man to play tricks on them. Water may have been sprinkled on a prisoner's face, and likely enough. You know prisoners have fits, real ones at times, or faint, and water would be sprinkled on their faces. You also know numbers of prisoners sham fits, but they generally recover before they get sprinkled when they see the water coming."

"D. L." cannot be traced. No officer named.

(3.) Q. 9651 and 9652. Ill treatment of a prisoner, "S" (a Jew), at Portsmouth.

"S" cannot be traced. No officer is named.

(4.) Q. 9653 and 9654. Murder of a warder by a convict at Portland in 1879.

This no doubt refers to the murder by convict Jonah Dethridge of assistant warder Joseph Trevitt on 23rd March 1869 (not 1879 as stated). The convict struck the officer with a "pick" on the head and neck, inflicting injuries to which he succumbed in about three hours. Assistant warder Trevitt was stated by the governor to be a quiet well conducted officer, whilst the convict Dethridge was a man of very bad character.

The following is a copy of a voluntary statement made by convict Henry Davis immediately after the murder, who was in the same party, and who witnessed the attack on the officer:—

"At about 10 or 12 minutes past 11 o'clock on the morning of the 23rd March 1869, I was in a standing position waiting to go out with my barrow, when I saw a prisoner in my party, named Dethridge, walking in a hurried manner towards our officer, Mr. Trevitt, with a stone pick in his hand, as if to ask him to change it for him, but I believe from the hurried and suspicious manner in which the prisoner Dethridge approached him, he must have had some apprehensions as regarded his intentions towards him. He was standing in a position that he could not see him until the prisoner was close to him, but immediately he turned round to get away from him the prisoner Dethridge at the same moment aimed a blow at him but did not succeed in striking him in consequence of Mr. Trevitt having slipped and fell over the slope of the battery, a distance of about 6 or 7 feet. Prisoner Dethridge not having succeeded in his first attempt followed him to the spot where he fell and struck him on the left side of the back of the head with the side of the pick, I believe, and repeated the blow by striking him in the neck with the point of the pick. I have not the slightest hesitation in asserting that he intended to have continued striking him only that he saw some of the prisoners rushing towards him, myself among the number, and also assistant warder Holmes with his drawn sword. After the second blow he dropped the pick and ran towards Mr. Gulliver's party, but in consequence of Mr. Holmes and several prisoners shouting to stop him, Mr. Pearce, assistant to Mr. Gulliver, seized him, Mr. Gulliver coming immediately to his assistance. I have also to state that a short time previous I overheard a few words passing between Mr. Trevitt and the prisoner to the following effect: It appeared that Mr. Trevitt had ordered him to do something to a stone, when the prisoner said he should do it if he liked. Mr. Trevitt said, 'Well, we shall see if you will or not.' Dethridge said, 'Come and do it now.' The events recorded in this statement is, I swear, the solemn truth.

Signed by my own hand.

(Signed) HENRY DAVIS.

Witnessed.

(Signed) R. LAMBERT.

(Signed) H. MACINTOSH."

This statement goes to show that there was no "nagging," but that the prisoner when ordered to do some work by the officer had said, "He should do it if he liked," the officer replying, "Well, we shall see if you will or not."

The facts were reported to the Secretary of State, and Dethridge was tried, convicted, sentenced to death, and executed at Dorchester on 12th August 1869.

See also Minutes of Evidence of Penal Servitude Acts Commission, Question 2144.

(5.) Q. 9655. Murder of another warder named "Blyth."

This no doubt refers to the murder of warder Bly. This officer was severely injured by blows from a shovel, inflicted on him by convict Thomas Ratcliffe on 20th April 1870, but lingered until 15th June 1870, when he died from the effects of the injuries he had received.

The facts were duly reported to the Secretary of State, and Ratcliffe was tried, convicted, sentenced to death, and executed at Dorchester on the 15th August 1870.

There are no papers in the possession of the Prison Department bearing on this case.

(5.) Q. 9660. Whilst he was at Portsmouth Convict Prison four men "made away with themselves."

Prisoner was at Portsmouth Convict Prison from 16th July 1885 to 5th July 1892.

Q. 9730. A man named "S." threw himself over the balcony and died directly he was taken to the hospital.

No name beginning with "S" can be traced, but convict D 1,136, John Jackson, did in July 1888 throw himself over the rails of the third landing. He was taken to hospital and died after four days from the effects of the injuries he received when he fell. The usual inquest was held, the verdict being "Suicide whilst of unsound mind." The facts were reported to the Secretary of State on the 16th July 1888.

The prisoner had threatened to commit suicide when at Durham Prison. He was a quiet man. His own explanation of his act was that "he was tired of life in prison"; he made no complaint of ill-treatment.

Q. 9727. "H" hanged himself on the Sunday and when they opened his cell door Monday morning the man was dead, this was in 1890.

No name beginning with "H" can be traced, but convict Q 154, William Lloyd, so destroyed himself in February 1891. The usual inquest was held, the verdict being "Suicide by hanging himself in his cell, but as to the "state of his mind at the time there is no evidence." There seemed nothing to account for the suicide, the convict during his imprisonment having incurred but three reports, none being of a serious nature. The circumstance was reported to the Secretary of State on 17th and 21st February 1891.

Q. 9735. He, "H. L." made away with himself, &c.

No name corresponding with "H. L." can be traced, and as a matter of fact there were only two suicides in Portsmouth Convict Prison, viz., those of convicts Jackson and Lloyd above stated, during the eight years ended 31st March 1893, in which the witness was there as shown in the Annual Reports of the Directors of Convict Prisons for that period.

Q. 9664. A man asked him at Portland to "strike his "hand with a hammer and smash it," which he refused, but another did it so as to need amputation.

This cannot be traced, no name or date being given.

Q. 9664. Self mutilation cases at Chatham.

These formed one of the matters investigated by the Penal Servitude Acts Commission 1879 (Lord Kimberley's). Much evidence was taken by the Commissioners, who came to the decision that "these acts "on the part of a certain number of prisoners did "not justify the conclusion that the severity of "punishment was excessive."

See Report, page 62, para. 141.

*Paper handed in by Mr. Trevarthen.

The particulars relating to boys now in the farm school who have been previously inmates of voluntary homes may be summarised as follows:—

Of 40 boys of this class admitted since 1st January 1893 it should be understood they were all guilty of grave offences, many were well known to the police as habitual thieves, and some had been known to have been convicted before. Nearly all had been charged one or more times, pleaded guilty and been let off. Two had been convicted and punished three times before, and three once before. Two had been in the same or other voluntary home twice before and one three times. The average time they remained in the home to which they were sent by the magistrate was about seven weeks. Three of them absconded in a few hours, and three others within a week. Nearly all the rest absconded or were discharged for misconduct, and five of them were prosecuted for stealing from the employers with whom they were placed. Only three of the whole 40 remained in the home over six months.

SUBJECT INDEX.

ACCOMMODATION AND ASSOCIATION.

Miss M. J. Bell.—Association, due to over-crowding, necessary on one or two occasions at Holloway, but quite three years back, 5431–4.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—As to over-crowding in female reception cells, e.g., Strangeways, this is a matter which largely depends on organising power of governors, 11,021*a*–23. Removals from one prison to another cannot be effected without Secretary of State's warrant, but there should be no difficulty with proper foresight; it would save the Secretary of State much trouble if Commissioners could sign the warrants, 11,024–26.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—It is the governor's duty to report when he expects to have too many prisoners in time to get some transferred; if there was actual over-crowding at Wandsworth the governor was to blame, although an excellent officer, 6649–58; see also 11,748; present system of weekly returns as to accommodation explained; an estimate of the number of prisoners likely to be received in the following week might be included in these returns, but what witness favours is a distinct order to the governors binding them to send in a demand for the removal of prisoners, 11,779–89.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Association of prisoners very undesirable, but rendered necessary at Wandsworth during last five years (29 days in all) owing to lack of separate cell accommodation; only prisoners with short sentences associated, viz., the vagrant class, and those who in the course of two or three days will be discharged, 4049–62.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Strangeways has about 400 cells for males, and 60 for females; accommodation inadequate on two occasions in 1894, but witness thinks that it will prove adequate in the future, 7297–7305. Further as to cell accommodation, 7697–7715.

Miss E. Little.—Large receptions at Strangeways: 64 in one day in 1894; average about 20; only six reception cells or boxes; should have quite 20; would be glad of a set of boxes in which to place prisoners on reception, and separate cells for them after the bath, 5067–81. In November 1894, 351 women at Strangeways (400 several times of late), 362 certified cells, not including 21 hospital cells and a room where eight prisoners can be associated, 5234–5, 5262–6; prison often overcrowded; cannot set apart a portion for first offenders as should be done; suggests that certain prisoners might be sent to other prisons quite as close to the Manchester Courts as is Strangeways, 5256, 5267–72. Has made no complaints as to over-crowding; that is for the governor to remedy, 5285–6.

Prisoners are transferred to Knutsford, Liverpool, and Preston, 5287–9; 5309–10; transfers on a large scale would not work well; some prisoners averse to transfer; regard for matron rather than the question of locality accounts for this feeling, though the latter factor might weigh with prisoners, 5305–8; Overcrowding is reported to the governor, but sometimes three or four days elapse before relief comes by discharge or transfer; on the occasion of any great influx, orders are given for transfer, 5324–37.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Has never had more prisoners than could be accommodated in certified cells and in hospital, 703; no cells used for storage purposes, 1170; has applied for removal orders in anticipation of a rush, 701, 702; on one occasion, 12th December 1893, placed prisoners to sleep in association in hospital with an officer to look after them, 704–706. Interpretation of section 17 of Act of 1865, 707–24. Strongly objects to association cells, on special grounds, 728–42.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—In calculating ordinary certified cell accommodation in a prison punishment, hospital, &c. cells should be omitted, 2927–29. Prisoners in association under Rule 26 should by right be in hospital, 2930–32. Convicts now kept in local prisons nine months, therefore they should not be omitted in making calculation for purposes of s. 17 of Act of 1865, 2935, 2950. Evils of association resulting from insufficient cell accommodation, 2936–38. There has been over-crowding at Wandsworth every year but one since witness has been there, 2939–41, 3467, 3468; cannot give dates from memory, they can be found in blue books, 3399–405. Complaints of this from better class of prisoners, 2936, 2942. There should never be association without supervision, 2943–46. Prisoners like to have some time to themselves, 2947. Margin of accommodation in London prisons decidedly insufficient, 2948. Suggests form of return for insertion in Commissioners' Annual Report, so as to show precise condition of each prison in this respect, 2949, 3469–74. And amendments of s. 17 of Act of 1865, 2950.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Admits over-crowding in some female reception cells may exist, but efforts made to avoid it, 10,073–75; also admits there has been over-crowding in London prisons, 10,095–107; reduction in number of prisoners due largely to shorter sentences, necessity of care therefore in closing prisons, 10,280–86; you might perhaps deal with cases under, e.g., the Education Acts, Vaccination Acts, &c., otherwise than by sending to prison, and so make room, 10,286–91.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Necessary, at Wandsworth, in order to show compliance with s. 17 of Act of 1865, to add hospital, punishment, &c. cells to ordinary cells, and even then necessary to place prisoners in association or to transfer them, practically ignoring Rule 26, 2542–53. Association attended with serious evils and should be abolished; transfer an expensive process, 2556–59.

Suggested form for showing prison accommodation. Appendix II. (p. 529).

AMALGAMATION OF CONVICT AND LOCAL PRISONS.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Witness's view on this subject, 11,221–6.

Sir E. F. DuCane, K.C.B., R.E.—No ground whatever for Mr. Morrison's charge that convict officers have been unduly favoured as compared with local officers; out of 25 appointments since 1877, 23 have gone to local prison chief warders, 10,806–8; object now is, and rightly, to amalgamate the local and convict prison services, 10,809, 10,810.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Amalgamation of convict and local prisons would be a great convenience. No difficulty in the way, 11,749–54.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Suggests as a matter for consideration the amalgamation of the two systems of local and convict prisons, a matter touched upon by the Kimberley Commission, the minimum sentence to penal servitude is now so short that the convict might pass his whole time in the local prison, the convict prisons being set free for recidivists, persons under indeterminate sentence, &c., 10,385–88.

ANNUAL CONFERENCES.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Is not unfavourable to the suggestion made that certain governors, medical officers, and chaplains should assemble annually to discuss prison matters, and give to the Commissioners, and, through the Commissioners, to the Secretary of State, the benefit of their individual experiences, 11,732–40, 11,768–9.

ASSOCIATED LABOUR. See "Prison Labour" and "Prison Industries."

BANSTEAD ASYLUM. See Dr. Shaw's evidence under "Lunacy and Health."

BOOKS FOR PRISONERS.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Books changed at Pentonville once a week; sees no objection beyond administrative difficulties to allowing as many books as prisoner can read, 845–855.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Would allow prisoners more books on first admission, and, generally as many books as they wish provided work is not interfered with, 1545–51.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Distribution of books practically a discretion left to officials of the particular prison, a discretion liberally interpreted at Wandsworth, 2961–65; 3327–9.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Would interpret liberally rules as to books, 3160–62; for first two months prisoner gets religious or school books only, 3295–98.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Chaplain controls supply of books to prisoners, 335–41; no objection to allowing prisoners to read as they wish when not at work; nor to a change of book before the regular time, 342–4.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Allows prisoners to read as much as they can without interfering with work, 1923–28.

BROADMOOR ASLYUM. See "Criminal Lunatics."

CELLS AT PORTLAND AND DARTMOOR.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Cells at Portland too small, convicts suffer from cold in winter, vitiated atmosphere in summer, 9643–45.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—Cells at Portland too small and warming by gas jets bad; still not unhealthy, because convicts have so much out-door exercise, 1254–62, 1411–3.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Dartmoor Prison has about 730 large cells and 586 old corrugated iron cells, the latter are too small and should be abolished, 8759–69; and see 8897–902.

And see Appendix IX. (IV.) (p. 616).

CHAPLAINS AND CHAPEL SERVICES.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Sermons from other than the regular chaplains greatly appreciated, 8524. A change of preacher advocated, 8690. Owing, perhaps, to the chaplain's time being so much taken up, prisoners have very little personal dealing with him, 8659, 8690.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—At Dartmoor practically no reformatory influence was exercised by the chaplains; younger and more enthusiastic men required, and a change of preachers (looked forward to with much pleasure at Dartmoor) is desirable; chaplains should vary their discourses occasionally, 11,264–7; would give the fullest liberty to Nonconformist ministers to visit prisoners of that persuasion, and selected officers of the Salvation Army would do far more good with certain classes of criminals than either the Protestant or Roman Catholic chaplains, 11,281–3.

Miss Fry.—There should be a female Scripture reader at large prisons like Holloway, in addition to the chaplain, 5523–4.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—In chapel (at Wormwood Scrubs, for instance) women are sometimes placed too close together. Remedy, either increased accommodation, or one half to attend at a time, 6530–4; Would sentence a man to deprivation of chapel, not as a punishment but as a preventive measure in cases where the prisoner misbehaves himself in chapel, 6639–41. Questioned whether a governor has power to keep a prisoner from chapel, witness states that the Commissioners are so empowered and in most cases delegate their responsibilities in this respect to the governors, 11,741; witness's views as to the construction to be placed upon Rule 46 of the First Schedule of the Act of 1865 which dispenses under certain circumstances with the obligation imposed upon a prisoner to attend at chapel, 11,770–6; most Catholic convicts go to service every day; the fact there is not daily Catholic service in all local prisons where they are confined is engaging the attention of the Board, 6642–6; has not heard that Catholics represent themselves to be Protestants in order to get daily service, but has heard the converse, the object being to get under a governor who was supposed to be milder, 6647–8.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Prison Chaplain at Dartmoor needs an assistant, 8794–8802, 8941–43.

Major James Knox.—Favours a change of Chaplain, say every five years, 8040.

Miss E. Little.—Chapel at Strangeways not large enough to allow of prisoners being separated as they should be; difficulty could be met by holding two services a day, but more warders would be required, 5115–21, 5301–4; a Roman Catholic service is held on alternate days, 5164–70.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Attaches great importance to the influence of religion which is greatest with the young, and during the early part of a prisoner's term, 1640–43, 1678; a daily service for Protestants in all prisons, and for Roman Catholics where they are numerous; in other cases the daily ministration is left to the discretion of the priest, 1644–67.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—System of chaplains (some of whom give their whole time, others only a portion) not perfect, but difficult to improve, 10,615–18.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—More attention should be given to individual character of each prisoner, 3501; 300 cells as many as a chaplain can adequately attend to, 3502–3505. At Wakefield, Roman Catholic convicts had a daily service; not sure whether this is so at Wandsworth, 3586–3604.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Does not advocate change of preacher on Sundays, services two or three times a week sufficient; punishment would thereby be diminished as there is constant talking in chapel, 9862–66; has known governor to deprive prisoner of attendance at chapel, but has not approved of his action, 9932.

CHIEF WARDERS IN CHARGE.

Dr. Ancrum.—Chief warder in charge less anxious, owing to his training, to desire to reform than to preserve strict discipline; appointment of a person of superior intelligence advocated, 9217–18.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Approves of system of chief warders in charge, a reward for efficient service which he would be prepared to extend to the clerks; in future it will be a practicable economy for the officer in charge of small prisons to be also in charge of stores and do the ordinary clerical work himself, 10,803; does not attach much importance to the wearing of uniform, nor to the retention of the title "chief warder in charge," 10,804.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—The system of appointing a chief warder to the charge of prisons under 100 works well, 7434–43. He should be allowed to wear plain clothes, 7821–7.

Major James Knox.—Their appointment a retrograde movement; a man may be found admirably fitted for this duty, and should not be debarred from getting on; as a rule, however, witness favours the appointment of a better class of officers, 7993–98.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—A prison of 100 prisoners is too important to place in charge of a uniformed chief warder, it is right though to have some small governorships reserved for chief warders, 770–75.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Chief warders (taken from convict or local services indifferently) are in charge of prisons having 100 prisoners or less, 83, 97–102; few complaints against this system, but it would be better to have a smaller number of prisons in charge of warders, 103–106.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—All officers in charge should be styled "governors," and be classified to 5th or 6th degree; promotion from ranks not to be stopped, however, but should not be extended to clerks and storekeepers; promoted warder to have no more than 50 prisoners, 9387–90, 9469–72.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Does not approve of system of placing chief warders in charge of prisons containing 100 prisoners; limit should be lower, say 50, 1826–33, 2035, 2036.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—"Chief warders in charge" and "warder acting as matron": titles should be "governor" and "matron" respectively; matrons might be classified to 5th, 6th, 7th, or 8th degree; does not object to promotion of chief warder, 9852–61.

See letter from Admiral Tinklar, governor of Birmingham Prison. Appendix IX. (p. 610).

CLASSIFICATION OF JUVENILES.

Miss M. J. Bell.—First offenders should be detained in a separate prison, 5441, 5446; case practically hopeless after second or third offence, and classification would not apply, 5444–5.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Young prisoners might be kept apart and allowed to converse at exercise, 9778.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—In favour of the extension of the "star class" to local prisons, 6478, 6500–501.

Mr. R. Gorst.—In favour of boys being purged by punishment before their admission to reformatory, and there should be an interval to be passed in houses of detention (as a substitute for prison) under county councils, where the boys might be sifted and the proper school found for each, 6119–29, 6141, 6155, 6203; penal and reformatory elements should be separated, 6212–30.

Capt. F. Johnson.—No "star" class at Dartmoor; first offenders removed to Portland and Parkhurst, 8706–13; no classification except that the young convicts are put to work at trades as much as possible, 8714.

Major James Knox.—Would treat as a separate class persons guilty of offences which fall short of "crimes," 7876–84; such offences enumerated, 7881; re-convictions in this class 40 per cent., 8244–45.

Miss E. Little.—First offenders should be kept as much as possible apart, 5224–5256; Strangeways Prison, however, too crowded to allow of separate department for this class, 5270.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Juveniles under 16 should not be sent to prison; they lose the dread of prison, and generally the punishment loses its deterrent effect, while, at the same time, the stigma of having been in prison clings to them through life, 866–82, 973–1000; difficulty of interim between sentence and committal to reformatory should be met by providing some place other than a prison for detention, 1047–60, 1119–28; Act of 1893 should have been compulsory; the danger is that children will still be sent to prison before going to a reformatory, 883–91; young offenders up to 20 and 21 (carefully sifted, so as to exclude habituals of that age), should be treated as a class apart, 894–941, 1001–11, 1103–18.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Suggests as a classification separation of prisoners under 16 from those over; of the relatively innocent from the vicious; and of cases where the viciousness is hereditary from cases where it is the result of circumstances; much, to this end, can be done under existing system by zealous officials, 1570–76, 1594, 1692–96; approves suggestion of separate prison with special treatment for juveniles, but doubts advantage of fixing age higher than 16; soon after that age character is more or less formed, 1577–82, 1595–1603, 1693, 1771, 1772.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Witness objects to terms of classification "first offender" or "first conviction." Some period of youth (that period a low one) should be fixed for the purpose of classification, but there should be no strict adherence to a particular age, say 16; classification should be according to actual physical age; a youth of 17, undeveloped, might be classified with others not so old; juveniles to be kept apart, 6271–5.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—As to circular issued by the Home Office in December 1893, with reference to contamination, 400–403, and see 426, 592–9.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Juveniles under 16 kept entirely apart; in favour of so treating young offenders between say 17 and 21; little danger at present of contamination, but there is danger of recognition outside, 1932–52; birching better for boys than prison, 1998–2002; boys should only be sent to prison as a last resource and an absolutely separate prison for them would be a good thing, 2004–9, 2019–25, 2075; at all the prisons witness has had experience of, save perhaps Leicester, which is too small, a part might be enclosed off for some particular class, 2151–56; with regard to young offenders between 16 and 20 extension of reformatory system would do good, 2026–28.

CLASSIFICATION OF PRISONERS GENERALLY.

Dr. Brayn.—Ample facilities for classification of prisoners at Woking, 4812; facilities for placing jealous and quarrelsome prisoners apart, and for separating "star class" from others, desirable, and are adequate, 4814–16; star class, 4817–20, 4960, 4976; old women, 4916–18.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—As to evil effects of association and necessity for classification, 8528–29.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—A proper classification would remedy many existing evils, and promote the interests of order and economic management, 11,302; prisoners convicted of unnatural offences and murder, first offenders, those intellectually weak and the utterly depraved to be separately treated, 11,305–10. See witness's evidence before the Kimberley Commission in 1878, and article in the "Nineteenth Century" of December, 1894.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—As to classification, there are at present kept separate in local prisons juveniles, debtors, first-class misdemeanants, and those awaiting trial, 10,921, 10,922; advisable to extend classification to mentally weak, 10,773–75, 10,923, 10,951; and habitual drunkards who need special treatment, 10,924–35.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Present system of first, second, and third class unsatisfactory; convicts should be separated according to their moral character; some of the best behaved in prison are the worst characters outside; such are aided in avoiding offences by better education or fuller knowledge of prison disciplines; certain ignorant convicts unable to meet officers' wishes lose thereby the whole of their remission, 9674–7, 9772–7.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—In favour of classification; but beyond convict "star" class very difficult; system must not be too rigid but must leave much to discretion of governor and local magistrates, 10,015–21; if inebriates and epileptics were separated and age for reformatories raised no doubt prison population would be much reduced, 10,034–36. Suggests that category of first-class misdemeanants might be extended to bring in persons not ordinarily regarded as criminals, e.g. education, vaccination, &c., cases, but not debtors, 10,396–8.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—The class commonly called weak-minded should be seen medically every day, but it is on admission that there should be an exceedingly close medical inspection, and this is an immense undertaking, 6026, 6062–5; the proper way of dealing with this class is to keep them in an institution on the principle of Broadmoor, 6074–8.

CRIMINAL LUNATICS.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Broadmoor inmates, 480 males and 160 females. 53 per cent., taking both sexes, have committed homicide. Mortality about 3 per cent. per annum, 9268–78. Cost of a prisoner's maintenance, excluding outlay on the building, from 43*l.* to 44*l.*, 9307–11, 9334–36. Only a small proportion of the inmates have committed minor offences, 9325. Only the convicts, numbering about 100, are on sentence; the "Queen's Pleasure" inmates, about 540, are dealt with on order of Court, 9329–30. All cases of lunacy occurring in convict prisons are sent to Broadmoor, and the establishment would require enlargement if local prisoners were included, 9331–33. From 15 to 20 convicts are received in a year; some are received who ought not to have been sentenced; their insanity at the time of their trial should have been certified, and they should have come as "Queen's Pleasure" patients, 9343–44, 9363–65. Suicides, three in 18 years, but attempts are not at all infrequent, 9357–59. In witness's opinion a very large proportion of criminals are sane, and responsible for their actions, 9279–83. Is frequently consulted by the Secretary of State in cases of criminals under sentence of death with regard to whom allegations of insanity have been made, 9287–88).

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—Practically all criminals being lunatics should be treated more as patients than prisoners; punishment should be entirely subordinated to medical treatment, 5997–9, 6012. Witness's experience of criminals, that of an asylum physician not that of a prison doctor, 5995.

Paper relative to criminal lunatics in Banstead Asylum. Appendix VII. (p. 589).

DEBTORS.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Average number of debtors at Wandsworth, 9 or 10; they are a well-behaved class, and are kept quite apart, 4163–7; sees no reason for treating debtors and other prisoners alike as regards diet, 4312.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Debtors a dishonest class: no reason whatever why they should not be treated as criminal prisoners, 11,511.

Lieut-Col. E. S. Milman.—Debtors now committed to prison should be treated as ordinary prisoners, except perhaps some committed in respect of rates, 6826–33.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Category of first-class misdemeanants might be extended to bring in persons not ordinarily regarded as criminals, e.g., education, vaccination, &c. cases, but not debtors, 10,396–98.

DEPUTY GOVERNORS.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—As to deputy governors, prison population of 700 a good enough standard, 10,787–89; a prison of 1,200 not too large given the assistance of a deputy governor, 10,784–5.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Deputy governors desirable in large prisons, but not required with only 500 or 600 prisoners, 4172–82.

Miss E. Little.—A deputy matron essential in a large prison, 5102.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—In a large prison (and the line should be drawn at a much lower level than it now is) there should be a deputy governor, 11,417.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Does not think more than 600 prisoners can be managed without a deputy, 764–68, 1135–41; thinks it better to have one prison of 1,200 with a governor and deputy than two prisons of 600 each with a governor alone, 769.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—No strong opinion as to appointment of deputy-governors to prisons of over 700, save that it affords useful field of training for governors, 2951–57.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—There should be a deputy governor with 500 prisoners all told, but he must, of course, understand he has more than mechanical duties to perform, 10,341–43.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Very desirable that person who acts as deputy governor and has to supervise chaplain and medical officer, should be one in higher position than chief warder, 2652–61.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Deputy-governor only appointed for prison with more than 700 prisoners, 83–85, 96; relative positions of governor and deputy-governor, 86–92.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Has no deputy at Liverpool, though prison population averages over 1,000, of whom more than 700 are men; in his absence chief warder is in charge, and under him the matron on the female side, 1802–18; the same is the case at Strangeways, 1819–24; well satisfied with arrangement, so far as he is concerned; has very efficient chief warder, 1825, 2029–42.

See letters from Admiral Tinklar, Governor of Birmingham Prison. Appendix IX. (p. 610).

DIETARIES.

Dr. Ancrum.—Prison diet sufficiently good, but absolute uniformity of diet undesirable. Stirabout refused by the ordinary Gloucestershire prisoner (the agricultural labourer), but in the North of England the prisoners, accustomed to porridge, would doubtless eat it, 9197–9200.

Miss M. J. Bell.—No. 1 diet much disliked and is largely the cause of insubordination at Holloway, 5380–5. A large number of women are in repeatedly with short sentences (out on Saturday, in on Monday), the No. 1 diet in a number of these cases is departed from, 5416–22. Alternative diet recommended a pint of gruel (made with 2 ozs. of meal), and 6 ozs. of bread at breakfast; and a pint of gruel with 5 ozs. of bread for dinner and supper respectively 5423–4.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Approves of No. 1 diet quâ punishment; it is controlled by the medical officer, 10,847–49. As to sufficiency of diet for convicts, two Royal Commissions on which were medical men investigated it, and have been satisfied; modifications on medical grounds may always be allowed, 10,850–55.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Convict prison diet sufficient in case of sedentary employment, but not for men on the works, 9625–30; they lose weight unless allowed extra diet, 9745.

Miss J. T. Gee.—Would abolish No. 1 Diet (19 out of 20 women refuse it, they are not in a fit state to eat it), and give something warm in the morning (a pint of gruel); is satisfied with other classes of diet, 5837–42.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—Dietaries based on reports of committees; not prepared to recommend any alteration; No. 1 is frequently modified according to circumstances, 1265–75, 1453–59, 1471–83.

Miss E. Little.—1st class diet insufficient, 5128–9; modification suggested, 5130.

Rev. G. P. Merrick—No. 1 diet may become practically continuous in case of repeated short sentences; this perhaps salutary in cases of drunkards; but the rule is frequently modified by the medical officer, 1720–26.

Lieut. Col. E. S. Milman.—There is no alternative diet to stirabout, the latter according to his experience being universally rejected, 6795.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Thinks convict diet adequate both for those who work indoors and those who work out of doors; figures in proof of this, 10,731–41.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—No. 1 diet too low; practically continuous in case of repeated short sentences unless modified by medical officer, 3331, 3475–80, 3571–76.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Would allow all prisoners of over seven days to commence on second class diet, 3164, 3165, 3225; the doctor's business to settle diet in cases of continuous short sentences, 3226–30, 3248–56.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—No. 1 diet for seven days not injurious, 636–39; but, contrary to experience in the north, Indian meal not liked so well as oatmeal by female prisoners in London, 639–41; alteration of diet a serious consideration, 641.

Dr. Walker.—As to diet, has represented that stirabout is not liked, and is largely wasted, 3757–59, 3891–900; danger of No. 1 diet becoming continuous in case of successive short sentences; has suggested a revision of the diet, increasing amount of nutriment, 3760–70; a low diet in prison, e.g., if the stirabout is rejected, may lead in the case of habitual drunkards to excessive drinking when released, 3928–33; this low diet does not act as a deterrent, 3771, 3772.

See also "Dietary Punishment."

DIETARY PUNISHMENT.

Miss M. J. Bell.—For light offences at Holloway a day's close confinement; sometimes, but not frequently, No. 2 diet; favours latter punishment for prisoners receiving a fairly good diet, 5370–1.

Dr. Brayn.—Governor can give bread and water for three days, directors up to 42 days; the latter very unusual, 4882; lowest diet is No. 4 local prison diet, 4880; No. 2 (the usual punishment diet) is 2 ozs. Indian meal and 2 ozs. oatmeal made into about a pint of stirabout, 4878.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Approves of No. 1 diet quâ punishment; it is controlled by the medical officer, 10,847–49.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Dietary punishment of men in quarries of 1 lb. of bread a day with water, too severe, 9631–6, 9708–10; sentence of 28 days bread and water by director (governor cannot punish with more than three days) for threatening officer at Portsmouth, 9711–7.

Miss E. Little.—Dietary punishment not much resorted to at Strangeways; has a lowering effect on constitution; would be glad of an alternative, 5086–92, 5293–7.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Dietary punishments, if strictly limited, the least objectionable, 11,518.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Objects to dietary punishment, and would substitute for it, in the case of women, a light form of handcuff; this better too than punishment cell; loss of marks not sufficient, 1517–27, 1724, 1725; women more difficult to deal with than men; more given to "breaking out"; statistics on this head deceptive, since latitude is allowed to women, 1528–31, 1737–40.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—No explicit statutory authority for the infliction of dietary punishment by visiting justices, but that they have the authority is implied in the general continuance by the Act of 1877 of their duty of sitting in judgment on prisoners and punishing them if necessary, 10,762, 10,763.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Not in favour of long dietary punishment. As to No. 1 diet, stirabout is not liked and should be improved, 6323–25.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Objects to substitution of light handcuffs for dietary punishment, 3166, 3167.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Advocates No. 1 diet for seven days. No lowering effect on male prisoners, 9473–8.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES (ENGLAND AND WALES). See Map facing p. 456.

EDUCATION OF PRISONERS.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Education in convict prisons insufficient; the status of the schoolmaster should be improved, and he should be allowed to visit prisoners in their cells as does the chaplain; teaching should be as far as possible manual and technical, 11,250–3; advocates lectures on industries, thrift, &c., by chaplain, governor, or deputy governor, or any competent person approved by the governor, during last 12 months of sentence, 11,254; favours Sir E. Du Cane's view that music should be taught, 11,255–6. Choir practice at Dartmoor was considered a very great privilege, 11,361–4.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Thinks it a good thing for prisoners to be preached to by outside clergy now and then; also in favour of lectures to prisoners, and music and singing where any aptitude is shown, 11,009–14. As to schooling it was found that the teaching of prisoners in class led to abuses, hence education has been cellular; with compulsory education outside there cannot be so much need now for education in prison, 11,015; thinks it advisable that schoolmasters should be uniformed officers, a practice copied from that which obtained in local prisons before the transfer, 11,016.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—A warder acts as schoolmaster at Strangeways. His duties and hours explained, 7680–92, 7734–5.

Major James Knox.—A warder acts as schoolmaster at Leeds, and his hours are longer than if he were schoolmaster only, 8134–40.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Present system of secular instruction works well, except perhaps as regards the four months' time limit, 10,537–43; no objection to teaching in classes with proper supervision, 10,544, 10,545.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Prisoners should be allowed to send for schoolmaster who is nearer them in social position; his position unfortunately degraded in local prison service, a discipline officer now and wearing a uniform, which is a mistake, 3042–61. A question whether Nonconformist prisoners should not be allowed a choice of chaplain or schoolmaster, 3042.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Present system of education in prisons not satisfactory; would abolish limit preventing education before four months of sentence are completed, 10,047–51, 10,310–14, 10,367–73; would not object to collecting prisoners in small classes for instruction, 10,315–20.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Teaching should be in classes, not in cells, 2703.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Favours cellular teaching; increased work counterbalanced by fact that fewer prisoners now require instruction; schoolmaster should be uniformed officer; at York no master; the one man being taught is in chaplain's hands; has himself helped prisoner, 9451–55; no report made at York as to education of prisoners as a body, 9563–67.

Admiral Tinklar.—The attempts at educating illiterate prisoners are too faulty and limited. See Appendix IX. (ii.) (p. 610).

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—No special report made as to state of education of prisoners as a body; illiterates 20–21 per cent., 10 years back much higher proportion, 9962–64.

"ELIZABETH FRY REFUGE."

Miss Fry.—Refuge started in memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Fry; has been in existence nearly 50 years; female prisoners (but not of the lowest class) received, principally from Holloway, and are kept about six months; any period above six months exceptional; a year's detention would give the authorities a chance to make respectable servant girls of the inmates. A gratuity of 1*l.* is received from the State with each woman; 32 can be received, and as a rule the refuge is full; age of reception, 16–40, 5456–60, 5507–10, 5557–62. Of late years, other cases failing, remand cases (first offenders charged with petty theft as a rule and drunk and disorderly women), have been brought from the police courts. In 1893 of 91 cases 28 were of this class; they are very troublesome in the home, and when they go out to service; only four of the 28 have done well. After a term of imprisonment the women get on better. Drink perhaps has accounted for one half of the 91 cases; 56 are looked upon as hopeful, 27 doubtful, and of 8 nothing is known. Of the 91 women 61 were imprisoned for theft. The home is purely voluntary, except so far as the remand class is concerned: remand cases are not, as a rule, bound over in any recognisances, 5461–8, 5563–89, 5616–20. As a rule the women received are not of good constitution (impoverished by prison diet), 5623–30, and voluntarily stay in the Home for the whole period of six months, 5663–7; one of the drawbacks is that there are no compulsory powers of detention; this should be altered, 5669–70; women should be sent to a Home for a given period, and should be liable to be brought before the court again, 5672–3. Excellent matron at the refuge to whom the women become attached; discipline not disagreeable; rewards granted at end of a year if situations are retained and character good, 5472; given state aid would recommend extension of the Home, which is looked upon by the chaplain at Holloway as one of the first refuges, 5474; sufficiently large, however, for one matron, if a real influence is to be exercised over the women, 5643–7; women from the Refuge are favourites with a certain class who, anxious to help in philanthropic work, keep one servant, 5473. The first imprisonment no disadvantage to a woman who goes into service. If after a year she does well and enters another family the new employer is not informed of prison record of servant, 5648–53. Of the convicts received for nine months before being set at large some have done well. The presence of convicts has an evil influence on the other women, 5475. No convicts at present; have had cases not suited to the Home, and have raised objection, 5501–3. Has heard no complaint from convicts with three years' sentence that they are debarred the benefit of a Home, 5504–6.

EXERCISE.

Dr. Brayn.—Exercise at Woking Female Convict Prison never less than one hour a day, more on Sundays, 4852–54.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Doubts if the loss of exercise on Sunday is a serious one; medical advisers were consulted before Sunday exercise was abolished in order to allow warders a Sunday off, and did not object on medical grounds; so long as the prisoners have books there is nothing terrible in their being kept in on Sundays; if Sunday exercise were instituted it would necessitate increase of staff, 10,904–13.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Sunday exercise a necessity for all prisoners, 11,507–8.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—For females some light form of exercise combined with work in the open air, e.g., gardening, would be the best thing, better than walking round and round a yard, 6031–8.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Staff at Birmingham adequate, even to secure Sunday exercise, to dispense with which would be a mistake, 2704–11; one hour a day exercise is sufficient, 2712, 2713.

Capt. Stopford—No Sunday exercise in local prisons; insufficient staff for the purpose, 687–90.

FEEBLE MINDED. See "Weak-minded Prisoners."

FEMALE PRISONERS WITH INFANTS.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—Knows of no serious trouble arising from a mother being deprived of a child born in prison, 1391–96.

Miss E. Little.—Present treatment of infants in prisons satisfactory; prisoners with infants excluded from associated work, 5131–3.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—In 1875 or 1876 when convicts were allowed to talk at exercise and on Sunday, witness conversed with every class of criminal, and has no hesitation in saying, notwithstanding evidence given before the Committee to the contrary, that the hardened offender does not dread solitary confinement; he uses this period for malingering purposes in order to get invalided to some prison where he may escape hard manual labour, 11,197–11,201, 11,289–91, 11,311–3, 11,322–5; witness's experience of solitary confinement, 11,284–8; "the irreclaimable class who are thieves by conviction" should be kept in a separate prison; these criminals in the process of time become men of very weak intellect; treatment recommended: not long or severe punishment (does not believe in cumulative sentences), but detention (with productive labour, 11,296–9), and such treatment as experts in mental diseases and kindred ailments would suggest; similar treatment to be extended to those guilty of larceny, petty theft, &c., if over 30 years of age, 11,211–9; under 25 or 30 they might be reclaimed; not much hope for "third timers," 11,214, 11,257–8. Irreclaimable criminality a form of insanity, 11,242, see conversation with well-educated burglar at Dartmoor to bear out this view, 11,293; no belief in reclamation by punishment, 11,294–5.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Thinks habitual or frequent offenders should be more severely treated than those who have been only once or twice guilty, but prefers to leave such severity to the discretion of a judge than to have a mechanical system of cumulative sentences, or the indeterminate sentence implying there is somebody who has the power of telling when a man is reformed, which person does not exist, 10,946–49.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Is sure 80 per cent. perhaps even 90 per cent. of habitual criminals would work if they could obtain employment, 9607; only way to reclaim 10 per cent. hardened criminals is to keep them from their old associates, 9617; treatment recommended for hardened criminal who with, say, six convictions and intervals of crime is convicted a seventh time, three or four years in a local prison; monotony much dreaded, and worse punishment than convict prison, 9615; favours suggestion of half-way house between convict prison and liberty; if Government establishment were set up the men would voluntarily enter, 9618, 9619.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Short sentences of no use to reform habitual criminals in favour of cumulative sentences, 6479–80.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Habitual criminals should undergo cumulative sentences, 7337–43; and should be detained in a special prison, 7344–47; said to be manufactured between the ages of 16 and 20, but witness thinks they commence their career much earlier, 7377–81. Thinks that the comparative destruction of prison industries under the present system has nothing whatever to do with the increase of old offenders, 7733.

Capt. F. Johnson.—For habitual criminals favours long sentences arrived at by a cumulative process, but deterrent effect of same nil, 8807–12.

Major James Knox.—Cumulative sentences advocated, 7892–95, 8241–42. Of the prisoners at Leeds 25 per cent. are of this class; 30·58 of the women, 8096.

Dr. Bevan Lewis.—The habitual criminal simply a degenerate offspring of a very degenerate stock; given a certain environment you will have crime, a more favourable environment simply insanity, 9083.

Supt. G. E. Smith.—Does not think habitual criminals are manufactured by lads meeting in prison with men more hardened than themselves, 2272, 2273; boys growing up in evil surroundings slide easily into crime; they associate with others of about their own age, and not with older men, 2274, 2284–88; sometimes a man or lad drawn into crime again through difficulty of obtaining employment on discharge; in this respect prison acts harder on young than on old offenders, 2275–78; the difficulty of getting employment not so great in the case of women, 2315–18; women do not work in gangs so much as men, 2319, 2320; man not often drawn back into crime by meeting men he had become acquainted with in prison, 2275.

Mr. Tallack.—The habitual criminal and the habitual misdemeanant should be treated in separate prisons, and there should be a more gradual and certain cumulation of penalty in both cases, 6863. Short sentences a cause of recurrence of crime, 7060–70.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Favours cumulative punishment; sentences now too short, 9441.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Cumulative sentences a failure, short sentences not a deterrent, any sentence more or less useless for hardened offenders, 9798–9800, 9804, 9805.

See also "Classification" and "Recidivism."

HABITUAL DRUNKARDS.

Miss J. T. Gee.—The removal of this class from the prisons would have a good effect on prison discipline; they should be in a separate institution, which, if laundry work could be found, should prove self-supporting, 5937–45.

Dr. Bevan Lewis.—The habitual drunkard should be compulsorily detained, and, accorded special treatment, he might thereby be saved from ultimate insanity, 9128–29; would be inclined to keep this class entirely apart, but sees no reason why they should not be associated with the feeble-minded in large asylums, 9130.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Habitual drunkards would be more effectually treated in an asylum than in a gaol. The practical difficulty is whether they could be committed long enough (the period of deprivation from drink must be a long one) to produce good results without causing excessive hardship to themselves and to their families, 11,509–10.

Mrs. Meredith.—Habitual drunkards should be kept in homes for inebriates for at least five years. Their craving for drink aggravated by prison diet. Greater attention should be paid to food and medical treatment in convict prisons, 5714–5, 5743.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Favours separate treatment and enforced detention for a year at least, 6320–21.

For number of prisoners classed as Habitual Drunkards and as Inebriates, on 15th February 1895. Appendix III. (p. 531.)

HOME FOR PRISONERS DURING LAST YEAR OF SENTENCE.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Not in favour of homes on the intermediate system; if the association of criminals in common lodging-houses be dreaded, regulated homes perhaps the less of two evils, 11,627–29.

Col. Plummer.—For the majority of prisoners (a small minority would refuse to take advantage thereof), an Aid Society's Home, (if such a place could be found) in which to spend a year before expiration of sentence, would be beneficial; this last year would be very useful for the teaching of trades, 9032–45, 9059.

HOMES FOR PRISONERS ON RELEASE.

Miss J. T. Gee.—For long-sentence female prisoners on release there should be some institution where they could have partial freedom; does not favour mitigation of sentence, 5891–3

INSPECTION.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Favours independent inspection of all prisons, the privilege to be extended to all Magistrates, Members of Parliament and County Councillors of visiting and reporting independently to the Home Office, 11,224.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Duties as Inspector, 6396–7. There are four Inspectors who relieve Commissioners by their visits of inspection, and reports; they hear prisoners' grievances, grant extra letters, &c. but have no executive power, though their being in touch with the Commissioners gives their suggestions some of the force of an order, 6398–6404. Some danger of inspection becoming perfunctory owing to permanence of districts, 6405, 6520–5.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Inspector visits Wandsworth once a month (for three or four hours a day), not once according to rule, the prison being a large one; he has no power to give orders, but can call governor's attention to any matters, 4138–44.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Attaches importance to work of Inspectors, and is satisfied with existing arrangements, 7512–16.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—In the local as distinguished from the convict prisons the Commissioners rarely inspect themselves, and the inspection by the inspectors is not altogether satisfactory, for they can never have the same personal influence on the governor and warders as a commissioner; one inspection from a commissioner would be worth three or four from an inspector. If necessary there might be an additional commissioner in lieu of the inspectors, 11,417.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Inspectors report each to the Commissioner for his district, 10,597–600, 10,610; some dangers from the inspectors having fixed districts of inspection running into grooves, 10,611–14.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Inspectors are under the Board and report to it: but each Commissioner also sees individually the inspector for his district, 10,011–10,012; danger of inspection degenerating into routine; would have no fixed district for inspector but order him here and there; much of the routine might be done by visiting committees, 10,356–65; no lady inspectors, but in favour of having one, 10,014–10,015; against having inspectors report direct to Home Secretary, 10,026, 10,357; witness's views as to the possibility of the visiting justices replacing the Inspectors, 10,272–9.

Capt. Stopford.—Duties and functions of inspectors, 49–54; no power beyond reporting, 55.

Admiral Tinklar.—The inspection of prisons by a Commissioner three or four times a year instead of monthly by an Inspector, might materially reduce the superior and clerical staff at the Home Office, while adding greatly to efficiency of the prison service generally. See letter from Admiral Tinklar Appendix IX. (p. 610).

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Visits 16 prisons each once a month but without notice and at irregular intervals, 9781–85, 9965–67; visiting explained, 9789; reports once a year to the Commissioners and to his Commissioner personally or in writing each time he returns from a visit; not empowered to report to Secretary of State direct, 9848–50; favours Inspector having charge of one district, 9933–36; provisions in Act of 1865 directing Inspectors to report by letter addressed to visiting justices does not apply to Inspectors under 1877 Act; not in favour of that course being adopted, 9873–8.

INTERMEDIATE PRISONS.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Not in favour of homes on the intermediate system; if the association of criminals in common lodging-houses be dreaded, regulated homes perhaps the less of two evils, 11,027–29.

Col. Plummer.—Long-sentence convicts should have some relaxation of prison discipline during their last year; a small prison might be given over to this class, where those of over five years' sentence might be allowed more talking, and greatly increased visits, to fit them for life outside, 8971–74; or, for the majority of prisoners (a small minority would refuse to take advantage thereof), an Aid Society's Home, if such a place could be found, would be equally beneficial; this last year would be very useful for the teaching of trades, 9032–45, 9059.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Does not think an intermediate establishment between prison and liberty practicable, 10,037.

JUVENILES AND FIRST OFFENDERS:

Miss M. J. Bell.—Is opposed to imprisonment of young girls; perhaps even to the age of 18 or 19 they should receive other treatment, 5442–51.

Miss Fry.—The first imprisonment (the disgrace of being in prison, prison discipline, and diet) has a wholesome effect, except in the case of low women. Not in favour of the First Offenders Act, 5469, 5514–6, 5595–5604, 5631–4; thinks Mr. Trevarthen of Redhill Reformatory is right when he expresses himself anxious that all boys sent to him should have been purged by imprisonment, 5469.

Miss J. T. Gee.—Chaplain at Liverpool takes great interest in first offenders; young prisoners (two at present aged 17) generally kept in a ward apart; cases under 14 reported at once to Secretary of State, 5817–20; first sentence not harmful, may have good effect, 5863–4.

Mr. R. Gorst.—In favour of boys being purged by punishment before their admission to reformatory, and there should be an interval to be passed in houses of detention (as a substitute for prison), under county councils, where the boys might be sifted and the proper school found for each, 6119–29, 6141, 6155, 6203; penal and reformatory elements should be separated, 6212–30.

Miss E. Little—Girls of 12, 14, or 15 (even up to 17) sentenced for the first time should be sent direct to reformatories, not first to prison, 5236–47.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Is entirely opposed to the imprisonment of children under 16; this could be avoided if the Bill brought in by Mr. Henry Matthews in 1891—the Summary Jurisdiction (Youthful Offenders) Bill—were brought into operation; the Bill was opposed because it authorised flogging; even without that proviso it would be worth having, 11,492–3; witness is in favour of whipping, 11,526–30.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Juveniles under 16 should not be sent to prison; they lose the dread of prison, and generally the punishment loses its deterrent effect, while at the same time the stigma of having been in prison clings to them through life, 866–82, 973–1000; difficulty of interim between sentence and committal to reformatory should be met by providing another place than prison for detention, 1047–60, 1119–28; Act of 1893 should have been compulsory; the danger is that children will still be sent to prison before going to a reformatory, much as before, 883–91; young offenders up to 20 and 21, carefully sifted, so as to exclude habituals of that age, should be treated as a class apart, 894–941, 1001–11, 1103–18.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Juveniles under 16 should be (and are as far as possible) kept apart; there is the danger of contamination in prison, and perhaps more on women's than men's side, 1555–57; it is after 16 that the real criminal age begins; instances in support of this view; criminal habits rather than criminal instincts the cause, 1558–60, 1567–69; suggests as a classification separation of prisoners under 16 from those over, of the relatively innocent from the vicious, and of cases where the viciousness is hereditary from cases where it is the result of circumstances; much to this end can be done under existing system by zealous officials, 1570–76, 1594, 1692–96; approves suggestion of separate prison with special treatment for juveniles, but doubts advantage of fixing age higher than 16; soon after that age character is more or less formed, 1577–82, 1595–1603, 1693, 1771, 1772; would not look for substantial diminution in prison population if age for committal to reformatories were raised above 16, 1604, 1605, 1620–35.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Imprisonment for children under 14 should be abolished, and Home Secretary should be apprised, as in Belgium, of imprisonment of child under 16, 3104–3106, 3316–18; 18 not too old to deal with children in a reformatory, but if in prison those between 18 and 21 should be subjected to educative influences, 3319–21; it is not realised what a high per-centage of the general population between 16 and 21 come into our prisons; hands in returns showing this (see Appendix III.) and the parentage, social condition, and occupation of young prisoners, 3106–3108; also returns showing per-centage of labourers to general and to prison population; the relation between crime (juvenile and other), and density of population; between pauperism and crime; and between pauperism and illegitimacy, 3109–13; these returns show juvenile offender the product of bad parental, economic, and social conditions, therefore juveniles between 16 and 18, or 16 and 21, should be placed in special establishments, or, where few, in special divisions of prisons, administered more on reformatory than prison lines, under officers of proved character; their diet should be good, and their employment non-cellular; on discharge juvenile offenders from towns should be found employment in country; e.g., the German Prison Code, 3113–18, 3123, 3124; criminal juveniles more immature in proportion to age than children of well-to-do, 3119–21; in classification of first offenders, juvenile or otherwise, would allow considerable discretion to prison authorities, 3516–19.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—First offenders should be kept separate, 3174; not prepared to express opinion as to young offenders up to 21, though there is a chance of reclaiming the young, 3175–79.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Youths of over 17 should be sent to prison, 585–91, 678, 679; age of young offenders for separate treatment should be limited to 18, 439–40; behaviour of young offenders should affect their treatment, 441–44; question of first offenders dealt adequately with by the First Offenders Act, 449–52; first offenders of mature age are dealt with differently in the convict and local prisons, 453–56.

Mr. J. Trevarthen.—Act of 1893, (abolishing necessity for prior imprisonment) mistaken policy, and has caused confusion. There must be an interval between the sentence and the finding of a reformatory; some boys are actually sent for some days to a workhouse despite danger of contamination, 2801–809, 2889, 2898–908. True that the objection to imprisonment was crippling reformatories, but the First Offenders Act and the too free use of "voluntary homes" has had much to do with it, 2813–23, 2868, 2869.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Juveniles under 16 kept entirely apart at Liverpool; in favour of so treating young offenders between say 17 and 21; little danger at present of contamination, but there is danger of recognition outside, 1932–52; birching better for boys than prison, 1998–2002; boys should only be sent to prison as a last resource and an absolutely separate prison for them would be a good thing, 2004–9, 2019–25, 2075; at all the prisons witness has had experience of, save perhaps Leicester, which is too small, a part might be enclosed off for some particular class, 2151–56; with regard to young offender between 16 and 20 extension of reformatory system would do good, 2026–28.

Mr. W. Wheatley.—Objections generally to imprisonment of juveniles, 7122, 7140; bad effect of remanding to prison pending selection of reformatory, 7166, 7172–78; necessity of classification in prisons, 7167–71.

Mr. Edwin Witheford.—Objects to imprisonment for mere children, though not prepared to speak very favourably of reformatories, 4034–42.

LADY VISITORS:

Dr. Brayn.—No regular lady visitor at Woking; 4902; doubtful whether a general system of lady visitors is desirable, 5032.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—In favour of lady visitors, who may exercise a moral influence over women in prison, and help them when they come out; plan has been adopted in local prisons, but did not work well in convict prisons, 11,020, 11,021.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—In favour of lady visitors under proper regulations to avoid interference with matron and chaplain, and the carrying of messages, which would break down the marks system, 6546–51.

Miss J. T. Gee.—Would allow ladies to address prisoners in chapel or in a room in the prison, but would object to visits to individual prisoners, 5861–2, 5913–22, 5935–6.

Mrs. Meredith.—Favours a return to the system of lady visitors which obtained prior to 1877, but would not allow private interviews in the cells. Ladies should be allowed to address prisoners in chapel or one of the large rooms of the prison, and female Scripture readers should be appointed. Lady Elizabeth Biddulph would be useful on the Prison Commission to regulate such matters as visiting, reading, &c., by volunteers, 5752–8, 5770–8.

LUNACY AND HEALTH:

Dr. Ancrum.—Cases carefully watched at Gloucester. Few prisoners are insane though many feign insanity, 9219. The mere fact that a man is a criminal would not constitute an objection to his transfer to an ordinary lunatic asylum, 9221–4. Suspected cases carefully treated and put into association, 9225–6.

Dr. Brayn.—Medical condition of prisoners inquired into on reception at Woking, 4821; the "medical history" sent with them from local prisons is verified at convict prison, 4823; "Hospital cases," which include everything however trivial, average about 7 per cent., 4872. Figures laid before Committee as to insanity deceptive, 4966; daily average of prisoners an unfair basis, 4966, 5044; insane paupers much more numerous than insane prisoners; never knew a case of insanity produced by prison life, though vicious habits in prison may have had some effect in one case, 5046.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Criminals drawn from a class mentally, morally, and physically below average of population, therefore higher ratio of insanity naturally to be expected, 10,968–72; doubts whether separate system increases any morbid predisposition; Dr. Gover's figures tend to show that insanity rate diminishes the longer prisoners stay in prison, 10,973–82; power and duty of medical officer to modify system where any suspicion of mental unsoundness, 10,983; medical officers of large prisons might be required to have some special training in lunacy, but there are difficulties in carrying out the proposal, 10,983–87.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Mental or nervous deterioration in consequence of imprisonment due to minuteness of rules, 9739; and to change from separate confinement to public works, 9740–44.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—In 1893, 34 prisoners became insane who were fairly sane on admission to prison, 1204–27, 1432–41, 1446–52; growing practice of magistrates sending for examination persons of doubtful intellect, 1430, 1431, 1487–95; naturally prison doctors have less cause than ordinary practitioners for reluctance to sign up an insane prisoner, 1442–45; doubts whether imprisonment is the actual cause of insanity in any instance, 1211–15; in very few cases low diet may have contributed, but this is guarded against by the medical officers, 1218–25.

Major James Knox.—Prison discipline not productive of insanity; quotes an instance, however, of a prisoner being removed to an asylum after receiving 30 lashes with 20 to follow; the medical officer being of opinion that the man's mental condition was due to fear of the second punishment, 8005–16, 8141–42.

Dr. Bevan Lewis.—Lunacy not manufactured in prison, but there are cases in which prison treatment may have hastened the development of insanity, 9124. The proportion of all classes of lunatics in a town of 10,000 inhabitants would be about 30, 9097–99.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Witness believes there are sufficient safeguards against penal treatment being imposed upon, or continued to, persons who are insane or on the verge of insanity; the statistics as to insanity offered to the public can hardly be accepted, 11,503–6; of the conditions of prison life the first shock of imprisonment is the most liable to lead to insanity, 11,539; thinks there would be considerable difficulty in the way of a compulsory entry in the calendar as to the state of a man's mind; would not suggest this course until the judges generally had been approached on the subject, 11,531–8.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Prisoners showing signs of insanity are placed in observation cells, 856; the weak-minded, but not insane, kept as a class apart, and placed in hospital association room if isolation bad for them, 1031–37; prisoners are sometimes sent to prison even though there are primâ facie grounds for supposing them to be insane, 856–58; prison life no tendency to produce insanity; the strain greatest during first portion of first imprisonment, 860–4.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Very few prisoners of a decidedly low mental type on entering prison, say 1 in 30, 6259–61. Imprisonment not conducive to insanity, 6258.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—Banstead receives pauper patients, and during 18 years the number received from prison has been 68, 36 males, 32 females; not aware how many of the latter are cases which have been sent to Holloway for examination, 5948, 5958–64. The majority of prisoners under witness's observation have been addicted to use of tonic agents, 6000; and short sentence recidivists, e.g., inebriates, who are especially liable to mental instability, 6007–11. On question of insanity of prisoners generally admits that he would feel bound to find evidence other than the crime committed, but would fully expect to find it, 6014–24. Aware of cases in which insanity has been developed in prison; kind of evidence which leads him to this conclusion mainly derived from questioning the patient himself, 5965–71; admits that he may not discover or be told of periods of temporary insanity in earlier life, 6039–47; and that in a number of cases prison life may merely develop seeds of insanity previously existing, 6079–85. (Case of a girl, C. A., received from Wormwood Scrubs; she clearly developed adolescent insanity in prison, 5972–7. As to prison treatment is strongly opposed to low diet and prolonged separation; latter fosters hallucinations, increases subject consciousness, and leads to self-abuse, 5978–80, 6030: want of sufficient open-air exercises, especially want of Sunday exercises, is also bad, 5987–91, 6027, 6068–73; a modified separation with good food, four hours a day exercise, and work, might last a considerable time, 6001–6. Present system whereby medical officer has full power where he thinks fit to order association and better diet is right, 5981–6. The great and growing disinclination on the part of medical men to certify as to lunacy, increases the neurotic condition of individuals and population of prisons, and is likely to lead to disastrous consequences; many think that there is more neurasthenia about now than their used to be, 6086–91. No moral insanity without brain impairment; if you examine prisoners by psycho-physical processes you will almost universally detect a neurotic taint, 5992–4, 6048–53; fear of punishment has not a psycho-physical effect with the insane, but admits that lunatics are more or less amenable to rewards or punishments, 6054–8; personal castigation unnecessary, 6059–61.

MARKS SYSTEM:

Dr. Brayn.—The system of marks should be the same in every prison, 4913–15.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Convict prison rules so minute that prisoner can hardly fail to infringe them, 9638, 9639; mental and nervous condition suffer in effort to earn remission, 9739; it should be possible to earn money until discharge, 9678–80.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Not in favour of allowing prisoners to earn premiums, but they should be allowed to earn better gratuities than now, 6760–1. A prisoner in the infirmary would not earn the gratuity of 10*s.*, this is a hardship; but a check must be put upon malingering. Witness favours very liberal consideration being given to these cases on medical recommendation, 11,690–3.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Present marks system good, and works equally, 794–797.

Col. Plummer.—Very satisfied with working of marks system. If, at Borstal, an officer stops a mark, the prisoner is down to see the governor on the following day. This interest on the part of the governor has a good effect; 220 convicts in 1893 went unpunished, 8995–99.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Thinks prisoner in hospital should not have withheld from him, as at present, grant of marks towards gratuity, 2591–99.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Maximum of marks that prisoners can earn, 191–97; power of visiting justices and directors to restore marks forfeited, 198–200; number of prisoners who earn maximum number of marks, 201–3; marks earned in local prisons do not procure remission, 204–5, 207; in local prisons certain advantages as to treatment, 206; the rates of marks in convict prisons, 207–9; a three years' penal servitude man can earn remission, 210; a three-years' man better off than a two years' in a local prison sentenced to hard labour, 211–13, 228, 229, 230–34; mark system in convict and local prisons set out in Standing Orders 494, 495, and 203 respectively, 221–28; marks system would have to be applied differently to local prisoners if it were to affect sentences by remission, 238–44; all classes in convict prisons arranged by marks, 245–48.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—It should be possible to earn more money, 9435.

Admiral Tinklar.—The marks system requires thorough revision and extension. See Appendix IX., ii. (p. 610).

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Marks system works admirably, 1883, 1884; no inequality between strong and weak prisoners save that a prisoner in hospital does not earn marks towards gratuity, 2191–202; against allowing local prisoners to earn remission, because sentences nowadays are too short, 1885–87; suggestion only reasonable in case of sentences of 12 months or more, 1975–93, 2090.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Prisoners sentenced for one year, 18 months, or two years should earn gratuity and remission in same way as does prisoner sentenced for eight months or under; such is the case at Prison de la Santé at Paris, 9810–13.

MAT-MAKING IN PRISONS.

Memorandum by Sir E. Du Cane, 1888. Appendix IV. (p. 565).

See also "Prison Industries."

MATRONS.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—In absence of the governor, thinks it as well that the male chief warder should be in charge rather than that the responsibility should rest with the matron, 7479–84. No third-class matron at Strangeways; it has been given in evidence that this class of matron has no power to visit the prisoners; this should not be, 7485–90, 7640–42.

Major James Knox.—Matron at Leeds, whether 1st class or 3rd class, visits the female prisoners each day, 7978–83. Present relation of matron to the chief warder in governor's absence satisfactory, 7984–85.

Miss E. Little.—Staff at Strangeways insufficient. In a large prison a deputy matron is essential; a good active matron ought not to have to control more than 200 prisoners. Is allowed six weeks' leave, but, being short-handed, generally takes three; responsibility rests with chief warder in matron's absence, 5099–107. Matron's influence over warders and prisoners would be improved if she were not a uniform officer, 5189–94.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Approves suggestion that matron should act as unpaid agent of Prisoners' Aid Society in case of female prisoners; even with 200 prisoners in her charge could give time to work of society, 9541–45.

MEDICAL INSPECTOR.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Medical inspector does not pay periodical visits, which would, perhaps, be an advantage, 6414–7.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Present medical inspector does not pay periodical visits; doubts whether this is necessary, 10,244–6.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Dr. Gover's exact official position, 357–60; appointed in consequence of recommendation of the Royal Commission of 1878, 361–63.

MEDICAL OFFICERS AND THEIR DUTIES.

Dr. Brayn.—Medical condition of prisoners inquired into on reception at Woking, 4821; the "medical history" sent with them from local prisons is verified at convict prison, 4823; "hospital cases," which include everything however trivial, average about 7 per cent., 4872.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Medical treatment satisfactory, 8538–40.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—No reason to suppose medical staff is not up to the mark for dealing with mental cases, 10,772; Describes present method of appointment salaries, 10,988–92.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Medical supervision unsatisfactory at Portsmouth and Woking, 9659–60, 9662.

Miss Fry.—A certificate is furnished with women received at the "Elizabeth Fry Refuge" from Holloway to the effect that they are free from disease, and a medical man attends the home once a week and sees every new arrival; women are sent to London Hospital as out-patients, 5674–5.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Two medical officers at Strangeways; an assistant needed, 7860–64.

Major James Knox.—No resident medical officer at Leeds; he has frequently to be sent for, 8111–25. Room for improvement, 8127.

Dr. Bevan Lewis.—Such men as have not special psychological knowledge or training are not the men for the prison service, 9110. To detect malingering requires a large experience in the study of mental diseases, 9113. Advocates a much more thorough inspection, under different conditions, of the whole prison community, 9125; all important that there should be ample opportunity and facilities for a correct diagnosis of a man's mental condition when taken to prison, 9133. A medical officer should be recognised as an enthusiast in the study of craniology, and should have, say, six months' preparatory training in an asylum, 9134; occasionally an officer is drafted from the asylum service, but this class would be very largely in the minority, 9135. 50 admissions a day would tax the energies of one medical officer if duties were efficiently performed, 9137–40.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Questioned whether more could not be done to encourage suggestions by medical officers (the Secretary of State making it understood by the Prison Commissioners that such suggestions were to be encouraged and not discouraged), witness replied:—"The Secretary of "State would be willing to do anything which was "necessary for that purpose; but I think he would "be unwilling to do anything which threw the "slightest doubt upon that being the rule at "present." It is not for every medical officer to be constantly reviewing the whole of the prison system, but it is certainly his duty to refer to any special practice in his prison which he considers to be injurious, and if he has a strong opinion upon the physical result of any general feature of prison life he ought to state it. Again if he considers that the time allowed for the examination of prisoners was not sufficient or that his duties were excessive, it is undoubtedly his duty to make a representation, and the Secretary of State could only rely on the Prison Commissioners to bring the matter to his attention. Medical Officers' reports do not necessarily come before the Home Office. In the annual reports extracts are given, 11,543–50.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Medical Officers should have opportunity before appointment of studying lunacy, 3486.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Medical Officers should have facilities for recreation and exercise; this is not the case at Holloway, and the same remark is applicable, no doubt, to other prisons, 9292–95.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Medical staff at Wormwood Scrubs (medical officer and one assistant) insufficient, 6282, 6361–62, 6367–75. The principal officer should not be trammelled by too many routine duties, 6392. Witness's duties explained, 6283–89.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Important to have medical officers conversant with mental disease, but this not insisted upon at present in their qualifications, 10,227–31, 10,242; medical staff at Holloway (a special case) perhaps not strong enough, 10,243.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—Present system whereby medical officer has full power where he thinks fit to order association, and better diet is right, 5981–6.

Mr. Tallack.—Proposes that medical examination should be conducted by physicians and surgeons with hospital experience, 6909–11.

Dr. Walker.—Medical officer's duty to inspect prisoners on admission at Holloway; daily average about 70; maximum about 160; they come in as early as 10 a.m., and as late as 10 p.m., 3693–97; description of a full day's work at Holloway, which falls on surgeon and assistant-surgeon on alternate days, from 9.30 until 9 or 10, 3698–3700, 3852, 3861–84; two men can do the work, but not properly, 3885, 3901–3904; evening group of admissions most numerous; the numbers make it necessary for the examination to be rapid, 3701–13; mental cases from 2 to 10 a day; many of them remanded from police courts for inquiry; their examination the most responsible work, which the surgeon does not leave to his assistant, 3714–28, 3870–74, 3883, 3884; a large number of these are cases of attempted suicide, 3861–65. More responsibility at Holloway than even in a convict prison, largely because of observations as to mental condition, 3773, 3774; about 600 remanded annually for observation, 3775–78; out of 88 cases of insanity in 1892–3 in Holloway, 72 were remand cases; some of them had frequently before been in asylums or prisons, 3780–91; bad cases are observed in hospital, others in ordinary observation cell, 3794–3800; agrees with opinion expressed by Prison Commissioners in 1880 that means should be devised to secure proper care of persons whose imbecility has conduced to crime, 3792; prisoners a class physically degenerate, and from which cases of insanity might be expected to spring, 3942–49.

NINE MONTHS' SEPARATE CONFINEMENT OF CONVICTS.

Dr. Brayn.—Would prefer to have prisoners for the first nine months without detention in local prisons, 4910–12, 5021; existing arrangements, 4982.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Convicts in local prisons undesirable, 8544–46.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Nine months' solitary confinement should be abolished, or, failing this, reduced to one or two months at the beginning and the same period at the end of a sentence for first offenders, only the old offenders being sent at once to hard labour; by this means prisoner would have the benefit of such reformatory influence (visits from chaplain and schoolmaster) as could be brought to bear upon him, just before his release. Solitary punishment has an injurious effect on prisoner's temper and bodily system, and produces insanity; several cases at Millbank during witness's nine months' experience of that prison. In 1875 or 1876 when convicts were allowed to talk at exercise and on Sunday, witness conversed with every class of criminal, and has no hesitation in saying, notwithstanding evidence given before the Committee to the contrary, that the hardened offender does not dread solitary confinement; he uses this period for malingering purposes in order to get invalided to some prison where he may escape hard manual labour, 11,197–11,201, 11,289–91, 11,311–3, 11,322–5; witness's experience of solitary confinement, 11,284–8.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Keeping of convicts for nine months in local prisons no new thing; was contemplated when Pentonville was established in 1842 as a model cellular prison for convicts prior to transportation; the nine months' separate confinement practically a necessary preliminary to the milder atmosphere of a public works prison; there is economy in selecting 10 or 12 local prisons as collecting prisons in which this first stage shall be passed, and, given efficient governors, there is no difficulty in managing both convict and local prisoners, 10,811–24; save in cases recommended by medical officer, hopes there will be no change in this salutary rule, 11,000.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Does not see much advantage in keeping convicts for their nine months' separate confinement in a local prison, but with an intelligent governor there can be no harm, and the plan is economical, 6454–9, 6510–3, 6631–8.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Not opposed to prisoners coming direct to a convict prison after conviction. Often receives separate confinement prisoners at Dartmoor, mostly from Wormwood Scrubs when that prison is overcrowded, 8696–705; nine months solitary system debilitating, 8891.

Dr. David Nicolson.—In witness's recollection no harm, physical or mental, has resulted therefrom, 9298–9301.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—As to convicts being admitted to local prisons witness thinks that better management would be ensured, given only one class of prisoners to control, 6270.

Col. Plummer.—From the point of view of discipline sees no advantage in the arrangement of sending convicts to local prisons for the first nine months; would shorten period to three months, 8964–9.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—Strongly opposed to prolonged separation, which fosters hallucinations, increases subject consciousness, and leads to self-abuse, 5978–80, 6030.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Has witnessed no ill-effects of present practice, but convicts an undesirable element, being more difficult to manage; no other objection; no danger of contamination owing to separate treatment; larger staff necessary; evidence applies only to Aylesbury and Knutsford; no convicts at York, 9442–49, 9483–88, 9515–26.

OPEN SPACES WITHIN PRISON BOUNDARIES.

For return see Appendix IV. (p. 556).

POLICE SUPERVISION.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—The ticket-of-leave should be reserved for old offenders; it operates against the first offender to have to report to the police, and this class should work out a short sentence instead; very strong grounds for complaints against detectives. Has, in conversation with prisoners who have returned after a first conviction, heard frequent complaints as to not being allowed a fair chance on discharge, 11,314–5; even in the case of a third or fourth term prisoner would give governor, chaplain, and doctor power to recommend discharge, without ticket, given real evidence of reformation, 11,369, see also 11,374; objection to ticket-of-leave system would fall through if regulations (which are admirable), were carried out, but they are not, 11,371–3.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).— Demoralising effect of, 9603, 9604, 9685–96.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Has heard, but generally speaking does not credit, statements that prisoners after discharge are harassed by the police, 1668–69.

Supt. G. E. Smith.—Not true that police sometimes unnecessarily give information as to the antecedents of a discharged prisoner, 2334–44.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Baneful effect of police supervision illustrated, such cases of frequent occurrence, 9801–2, 9871–73.

"PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE HOMES."

Mrs. Meredith.—These Homes have at the present time 200 children whose parents are prisoners. They are taken in at as early an age as possible; preferably soon after birth. No money is received from the Government until the children are seven years of age. They remain until 16 and are principally trained for domestic service. Failures about four per cent. 5734–8. Once in three months on a proper recommendation they see their parents or relations; but only if the latter are of good character, 5739–41.

"PRINCETOWN SCHOOL."

Capt. F. Johnson.—A school for the warders' children. Managed by a school board, of which witness as Governor is chairman and correspondent, but children in the neighbourhood admitted, 8922–23.

PRISON ADMINISTRATION. See "Prisons Board."

PRISON ACT, 1877 (GENERAL EFFECT OF):

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Transfer of prisons a success, 4047–8; old system less progressive, though personal experience at Lewes most satisfactory, 4185–7; the Act of 1865 discouraged industrial labour: penal labour was too heavy: reduction to one month a distinct advantage, 4188–9. Dietary more varied and more satisfactory than under the old system: governor has sufficient discretionary powers, 4190–6. Better field of promotion now for officers, and prisoners are better protected. Headquarters sufficiently in touch with prisons through medium of the inspectors, 4208–15.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Transfer eminently beneficial, not merely as the cause of a better administration of the law, but as being much more humane towards prisoners. Immediate purposes of transfer, economy and uniformity, entirely fulfilled. The prisons under the Commissioners are as a whole superior in every respect but one, the use of productive labour, 11,389, 11,393–4. Speaking of the period before the transfer witness thinks that the personal influence of the justices over prisoners has been very much exaggerated, and that the question whether the visiting committee has a greater or smaller share in the actual administration of the prison than was enjoyed by the visiting justices does not affect prison administration as a whole, 11,390–2; under the Act of 1877 it is possible for visiting committees to exercise a very direct power of interference with the administration of the prisons, but not advisable, 11,410–3.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Transfer of local prisons to Government has been a distinct change for the good all round, 960–66, 971, 972; such unfair anomalies as variations in dietary put an end to, 967–70, 1024–30.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Present system too centralised, insufficient discretion being allowed to officials of prisons, 3125–27; this is where the old system of local control was superior; there is now a want of elasticity, 3311–15; would allow more latitude to prison officials (medical officer for choice) in discriminating between prisoners according to their antecedents, especially in the matter of visits, diet, occupation; this difficult in face of public feeling, 3322–45; had no personal experience of system before transfer of local prisons to Government, but is of opinion that the magistrates now do not know as much as formerly, 3378–80, 3390–98.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Results of transfer of local prisons to Government satisfactory in respect of economy, discipline, and treatment of prisoners; anomalies, e.g., marks at Leicester, got rid of, 1792–95, 2219–26; but would be glad if visiting justices had some share in administration, better locus standi for recommendations, and a qualified power of appointment of officers, 2227–48.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Act of 1877 a success in many ways, greater uniformity and regularity, but present system of doubtful benefit as regards reformation and deterrence; sending prisoners abroad beneficial, 9801; provisions in Act of 1865 directing inspectors to report by letter addressed to visiting justices does not apply to inspectors under 1877 Act; not in favour of that course being adopted, 9873–8.

Brief history of prison system in England and Wales. Appendix I. (p. 457).

PRISON INDUSTRIES.

(a.) Before the transfer.

Mr. James Duncan.—Under old system of prison labour administration remunerative occupation held a prominent place, though in a few prisons penal labour predominated. Governors and other officers encouraged by bonuses and other payments to take an active interest in trade. Trade profits taken largely into account by visiting justices when dealing with applications for increase of pay, 4331–3. For sale of goods a commercial traveller was appointed. Trade managers controlled industrial department. Deserving prisoners were rewarded by gratuities and in other ways, 4331–5. In many prisons the inmates not sentenced to hard labour, or who were excused hard labour by medical officer, were employed in industrial pursuits instead of as now being confined to their cells for the first month. This practice might be resumed in a modified form, 4340–1. Total earnings in local prisons for year ending 30th September 1876 11,710*l.* 12*s.*, an average of 5*l.* 18*s.* per man. Average earnings of mat makers at Preston 18*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* per man, and of laundry women 22*l.* 5*s.*, 4336–8. Mat making was probably the most suitable as well as the most flourishing of all prison industries. 2,800 prisoners so employed when prisons were taken over, 4351: about 70 now employed. When agitation outside first arose prison mat makers exceeded by 23·87 per cent. the number given in the Census Returns as employed outside, 11,809–13. At one time 5*l.* or 6*l.* profit per ton was made by oakum picking; now it is difficult to make both ends meet; but at the present moment there is a slight improvement, 4352–9.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Before 1877 when prison labour was supervised by the justices there may have been more work for prisoners, but statements to this effect generally exaggerated, 6570–6.

Mr. Charles Hall.—Industrial work carried on at Lewes was considerable before the transfer, but afterwards reduced, 4566, 4589; e.g., mat-making by 40 or 50 men produced 1,000*l.* a year profit, 4567, 4718–28, 4746–48.

Comparative statement of the systems of industrial labour at Lewes Prison under the late and the present authority. Appendix IV. (p. 561).

(b.) Nature and extent of now.

Col. T. Barrington.—Articles made for the War Office, (representing money value for the present financial year of 2,440*l.*) rugs, mats, baskets, and oil cans. For these articles the prisons find their own material and tender as a contractor would outside. Last year a departure was made; 12,000 bed and bolster cases were ordered, the materials being supplied and carriage paid by the War Department. The contract is being continued this year on the same scale; the prison department anxious, however, for increase of orders. Prisons employed last year, Holloway, Pentonville, Wandsworth, and Wormwood Scrubs. This year five additional prisons, Knutsford, Liverpool, Stafford, Strangeways, and Wakefield (but see 11,462; as to matmaking at Lewes, Bedford, and Canterbury). Country prisons fairly up to time. No appreciable difference so far as quality of work is concerned between country and metropolitan prisons, 11,462–4. Quantities of articles made in the last five years: 26,766 oil bottles, 7,000 door mats, 1,700 passage mats, 1,800 hearthrugs, and 18,866 baskets. Quality of the work very satisfactory on the whole, especially the tin work. Rejections much lower than in the case of an outside contract. Deliveries fairly punctual, 11,451–61, 11,473. Difficulties have arisen in connexion with brush making at Gosport the short waste material having been utilized; this is used outside in the manufacture of small brushes, but the prison authorities have no outlet for it; it might possibly be sold periodically, 11,464–6; prison prices compare favourably with trade prices, 11,475.

Miss M. J. Bell.—Little opportunity to teach work at Holloway owing to short sentences, 5357; prisoners not anxious to receive instruction, 5360; those who can do nothing else employed picking oakum, others make mail-bags and mattresses for the War Department; the mail-bag work can be learned in a few days, 5361–3; thinks the dislike for oakum-picking at Holloway does but point to idleness and dislike for work in any form, 5367–9; has not noticed that prisoners' fingers are torn at this employment; the stain of tar complained of as preventing laundry work can be washed off in half a day, 5437–8; associated work popular, 5376–7.

Dr. Brayn.—Work at Woking is productive, and carried on partly in cells and partly in association in the manufactory, 4841, 4842, 4843; knitting, sewing, twine spinning, and laundry, 4844; is beneficial to the women, 4849; 134 of whom work, 4842; twine spinning is for the roughest women, 4920; laundry work the most useful after expiry of sentence, 4922; star class cook for officers, 4960.

Mr. John Collett.—Articles supplied include coal sacks and bags, hammocks, baskets, mats, matting, and clothing for the Royal Hospital School at Greenwich, value of work some thousands of pounds a year, 11,104–7. Quality of work rough, but satisfactory, 1114–6; articles very seldom rejected, 11,126; what little tinware is still made by hand is given to the prisons; it would not pay to set up machinery in the prisons in connexion with this industry, 11,127; there are difficulties in the way of giving orders for skilled work, the simpler the articles the better, 11,132–5. System of contracts and accounts with prisons explained, 11,105–6, 11,112–3, 11,128–31; orders are given for a year's requirements and difficulties as to supply of articles are now met by keeping a six months' stock of goods in hand, 11,119. The tendency of late years has been for the prisons to refuse orders on the ground of having too much work in hand. In 1889 they were offered the supply of uniforms for Admiralty messengers. For one year the work was undertaken, after that refused; an immense amount of delay and inconvenience was experienced. Then in May 1891, a small order for hampers (rough work that could easily be performed), and in February 1892 an order for canvas dresses for dockyard hands, were refused, 11,108–11,111.

Mr. James Duncan.—Industries existing before the transfer supplemented in an important degree by the introduction of manufacture of articles for prison use, 4342–50. Laundry work the most profitable industry for women; 20*l.* a head made at Strangeways in 1894, 4496–7. Hammock making introduced into local prisons in the last year or two, 4531; rough estimate of value of prison labour, 117,000*l.*, 4536–7. Government departments (the large providing departments) of late far more accessible. The Post Office the department most ready to help; but War Office and Admiralty now assisting in every possible way, 4395. Work done for these departments and for Board of Trade explained, 4397. Prisoners employed in manufacturing for War Office, 28; Admiralty, 289; Office of Works, 16; Post Office, 624; if skilled instruction were provided an immense extension of work for War Office and Admiralty would result, 4398. The question of the valuation of labour has been for some time under consideration, 4522. Explains cessation of Admiralty coal sack making at Lewes a few years back. The prison now undertakes the work again, an order for 1,000 sacks having recently been given. Very large order for coal sacks, hammocks, &c., (154,910 articles in all) lately received from the Admiralty. Excellent work done at Reading. Output of sacks increased from 1,000 to 8,000 a year, 11,814–5.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Industrial work good for prisoners, but no man on leaving prison qualified for high-class work; cannot compete with outside public; knows of cases, however, of work learned in prison proving useful, 9670–72.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Describes steps taken by Prisons Board to get work, mainly from government departments, 6577–8. If sack-making taken away from Lewes it was a temporary measure, 6579. No difficulty in setting convicts and long sentence prisoners to work on public works, 6581–3; printing as at Parkhurst, 6584–6; bootmaking, 6587–91; no lack of work for convicts at the present time, 6592.

Miss J. T. Gee.—Prison work at Liverpool: washing for prisoners and officers only, and knitting; oakum picking, which has an ill-effect, is being replaced by bean picking, 5803–11; also mail-bag making, 5908; short sentences mitigate against teaching of prison industries; laundry work leads women to the public laundries, with evil results, 5880–90; a warder superintends laundry; good work can be taught in a week, 5822–3, 5903–5.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—System of associated prison labour at Wandsworth works very well: the best conducted long sentence prisoners associated, 4101–7; would not, however, approve of any considerable extension thereof, with short sentences; separate confinement is better as a deterrent, 4197; see also 4198–4200. No need for any great extension of workshops at Wandsworth, work done almost entirely for Government, 4108–4110. Artizan warders superintend shoemaking and brushmaking, and two tradesmen the pouchmaking for postmen, legging making, &c.: in favour of extra pay for these officers, 4126–31; no labour master at Wandsworth, industrial population under no special superintending control but the governor's, 4281–4; with regard to task expected of prisoners, and appropriateness of same, the governor is much in the hands of a subordinate officer, whose observation enables him to judge; no officially recorded standard for each form of work, 4285–91.

Major James Knox.—40 or 50 hand-looms in the cells at Leeds for weaving of flannel; it is very undesirable that they should be placed there, owing to dust and diminished air space, but witness has no alternative, 7932–39. Trades acquired in prison not in witness's experience followed when prisoner is released, 7940–42. At Gloucester witness learned printing and some 16 or 17 prisoners were taught the calling, does not think one of them afterwards became a printer; industrial labour in prison more likely to prove a moral than an industrial training, 7943–47. At Gloucester the female prisoners earn 240*l.* a year at washing; at Leeds the prison washing only is done; this is as much as can be performed, 8067–71. Some women are employed on needlework and knitting, 8072. Effect produced by the change of administration in 1878 at Gloucester, so far as industries are concerned, 8161–66.

Miss E. Little.—Strangeways possesses a very good laundry (employing about 46 prisoners), and does high-class work for the Judges on circuit, Members of Parliament, and private families, over 1,000*l.* a year earned; prisoner's training completed in a week; the work is liked, and has a beneficial effect, 5134–49, 5209–10; skilled instructors not employed, if warder has no previous knowledge of industry she qualifies after arrival, 5211–14; other industries, mail-bag making, sewing, knitting, and making surplices for English prisons; excellent needlework done by hand only, 5150–2; prisoners capable of performing laundry work have no difficulty in obtaining employment outside, are accepted without character, 1*l.* and 30*s.* a week earned; has heard no complaint from outside as to skilled laundry work done at Strangeways, 5281–4.

Mr. Primrose.—The only articles now supplied to the Office of Works are tin paper-trays, and baskets for the Post Office, 11,137; considerable delay is often experienced, mainly owing to the locality of the prisons (Portland and Dartmoor) undertaking the work. The Prison Commissioners decide where the work shall be performed. Nothing in the nature of a prison labour conference between Commissioners and Office of Works during the past eight years; communications are of an informal kind, either verbal or by note, 11,138–41. Work discontinued owing to delay and other causes. Mat-making in 1892, owing to delay alone, 11,137–11,146; the prison department has been urged to keep a stock of common articles constantly asked for; the principle of the Office of Works until quite recently has been to avoid stores, and the consequent stores accounts; a small store of household articles now kept. Raw material all found by prison department. Value of mat-making industry for London 100*l.* a year, 11,146–9; carpet-beating was undertaken from 1884 to 1889, then refused on the score of the health of the prisoners, noise, and dirt. Work now done by contract at a cost of 450*l.* a year, 11,137.

Mr. Algernon Turnor.—Articles made for the Post Office. All the mail bags, pouches, and straps, and a variety of small articles, estimate for these articles for 1896, 20,000*l.*; also all the string required for the mail bags in London and in the travelling post office; stamping pads, notice boards, packing cases and boxes, estimated at 12,000*l.*; and waist belts, pouches, and leggings, representing another 1,000*l.* Total about 33,000*l.* a year. Work fairly done; delivery fairly punctual. No occasion to rescind orders or to cease giving orders, owing to bad workmanship, 11,421, 11,423, 11,429, 11,433. Tenders in the open markets not invariably asked for. In many cases the prison authorities are employed from year to year, and to a certain extent enjoy a monopoly. Prison prices considerably lower than the outside tender, 11,437–41.

(c.) Development of, and improvements.

Mr. Rowland Bailey.—Warders should have some incentive to take further interest in the work of teaching and supervising prison industries, and there should be a better supply of skilled artizan teachers.

Col. J. T. Barrington.—Work which might be undertaken. Sand bags, corn bags, sackings for beds, sacks of various kinds, barrack sheets, tent valises, pin bags, and canvas fencing jackets. The tin work at present is almost exclusively confined to oil bottles. Articles which might be added are meat dishes, funnels, dust pans, pudding shapes, baking tins, and drums and cylinders for oil and paint. Then in woodwork, inventory, knife, and notice boards, boxes, cradles for camp kettles, trestles, bed boards for field service, and soldiers' boxes (each soldier gets a box); and the brush and bass broom industry could be extended, 11,465.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Importance of associated labour, 8514–17. Mat-making and oakum-picking should not be carried on in cells where prisoners sleep, 8507–12. Need of skilled instructor at Reading in prisoner's time, 8579–81. Associated labour advocated, 8507–18.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Development of prison labour would not interfere with the free industry; the views of certain trade unionists are very narrow; competition in the mat-making industry would be infinitesimal as compared with foreign labour; opposed to under-selling the product of skilled industry outside, 11,242–7; utterly opposed to treadmill and crank, 11,249.

Mr. James Duncan.—List of additional articles which could be supplied to Office of Works, 4400. In favour of a furniture department, 4402. Believes that enough work could be found in Government departments for the whole prison population if facilities existed for instructing prisoners in workshops, 4463–4. An extension of workshops with necessary instructing officers would, he believes, in spite of heavy outlay, prove very nearly, if not quite, a financial success. As regards workshops, Wandsworth might be taken as a model, 4435–40. Skilled officers should receive extra pay, and the ordinary warder encouraged to take an interest in trade with a view to promotion, 4444–47. Favours revival of trade gratuities to prisoners, 4459–60. Any unfairness, so far as prisoners on domestic work are concerned, might be met by granting rewards, 4504. The prison most likely to prove self-supporting would be one for female prisoners engaged in laundry work, 4496–4503. Few instructing officers since transfer, and officers not so highly qualified as prior to 1877. No incentive, 4403–5. Improved industrial system would leave no ground for agitation, as the per-centage of increased interference with outside labour would amount only to ·04, 4482–4; or, taking the labour of a prisoner to be half that of a free workman, ·02 per cent., or 1 in

5,000 workers, 11,862. Long-term prisoners more readily trained, should be kept together in convenient prisons. Short-term prisoners might be engaged in gardening and mat-making, which can be learnt in seven or eight days, 4448–53. No case of a prison proving self-supporting, 4477. Convicts in convict prisons to the number of 700 employed on work for Government departments (hammock and coal-sack making for the Admiralty, for instance), which would be a boon to local prisons, if work in quarries could be found for the convicts, 4472.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Facilities for indoor work for short-sentence prisoners what is wanted, 6593. Industrial employment for prisoners from the time they enter prison strongly advocated. Hard labour prisoners should at once be put to work at their own trades; task work, 11,676–9; 11,759–61.

Mr. Chas. Hall.—Instructors difficult to get; warders able to act as instructors, 4597–4611; but do not care for the work, 4602–3; under the county management they used to receive extra payment, 4603–10, 4651–54, 4703–10; tradesmen and skilled artizans rare in prison, 4687–89; there should be inspectors of prisons as regards the work carried out, 4779; and skilled instructors exempt from discipline duties, 4784–88. Quality of prisoners' work good, but lacking finish, 4616–18; work rejected sometimes because not of description desired; inspection of work by qualified men would obviate this, 4623–28; introduction of a little machinery would improve work, but it is objected to in prisons, 4669–72, 4679. A central prison store or depôt would obviate inconvenience caused by fluctuations in number of prisoners and orders received, 4619–22.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Favours the introduction of a greater number of skilled workmen, with special remuneration, 7432–33: would be glad to revert to mat-making, 7806–9.

Capt. F. Johnson.—On the question of the better distribution of labour between convict and local prisons agrees as to the desirability of giving to the local prisons that class of work most suited to them, coal-sacks, hammocks, mail-bags, &c., 8742–48. Difficulty experienced, not want of skilled warders but insufficient work, 8751.

Miss E. Little.—Warders have not always the training required so far as prison industries are concerned, this defect should be remedied by an addition to the regulations of appointment, 5153–7; favours occupation being found for untried prisoners in their cells, they often apply for work, 5187–8; prisoners might be allowed to earn wages, not, however, to be expended in luxuries, 5215–9. Speaks of beneficial effect of a higher standard of work as a reward for good behaviour; prisoners should always have some occupation, and their work should be as advanced and cheerful as possible, 5250–3.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Labour should not be unproductive, but such as will exercise the mind; the cessation of prison industries, e.g., mat-making, owing to opposition of trade unions, a misfortune, 1775–79.

Mr. Primrose.—Industries which might be undertaken. In 1889 brush work was applied for, correspondence ensued with Treasury and Home Office without result. Total cost of London supply of brushes and brooms was at this time 1,600*l.* a year. One half of the articles (the commoner kinds), representing about 800*l.* a year, might be supplied by the prisons, 11,137. The present cost of washing for the Government departments is 3,500*l.* a year. Some five years back Manchester prison was understood to be willing to undertake the work, 11,145; knows of no objection to giving laundry and needle work to the large rescue homes, but as each department manages its own laundry work the authority of Government would be required before the present system could be altered, 11,151; other possible industries sewing and hemming of dusters and towels, and the supply of firewood, i.e., the small quantity of bundle wood required, faggots are principally used, 11,149–50.

Mr. J. J. Rudge.—Witness agrees that so far as the outside markets are concerned the result of prison labour has been very much exaggerated, 11,045; and that the estimated value of prison labour (120,000*l.*) is an almost infinitesimal proportion of the labour of the country, 11,046–50. The mat-making industry is seriously affected to-day by foreign prison labour, 11,057; in fact is suffering more seriously from competition to-day than a few years back, 11,059. Trades unions could not complain if regulations were framed for putting the products of prison labour on the market at a fair market price, 11,060–63. Agrees that articles supplied by the prisons to Government departments are probably of a special character, demands for which constitute a special class of work; and that prison labour in this direction would not come into competition in the sense that it might in the mat-making industry, 11,065–7; also as to the necessity for employing prisoners productively, but the Government should not become manufacturers on too extensive a scale, 11,082–90; knows of no industry, other than mat-making, which specially interferes with outside labour, 11,102.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Would extend associated industrial work, not for short sentence but for long sentence prisoners, 2640–46, 2714–17; this need not involve large increase in staff, 2718–20; disapproves of unproductive labour; none at Birmingham, 2647–51; aware of agitation against prison labour, but of opinion that local authority in a better position than Government to resist pressure of trade unions, 2618–21; open-air employment at Birmingham in stoneyards; this good for the men and popular, 2721–28.

Mr. Algernon Turnor.—Work which might be undertaken. Boots for the telegraph messengers, 11,432; no boots made at present, 11,422; given punctuality, is quite prepared to extend work, 11,436; very much doubts the expediency of employing prisoners in making uniforms. An enormous quantity needed at a given date. At present there is one contract for the whole of Great Britain, and another for Ireland. Averse to splitting up of a contract into very small divisions, 11,442–8.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Prison labour should be developed; very much against tread-wheel and crank, 9814; favours associated labour, prisoners associated not to exceed 12, 9815; association rooms at Prison de la Santé at Paris, 9813; system of skilled instructors works well; whether prisoner can hold his own with outside world on discharge depends on length of sentence and good instruction; difficult to avoid competing with outside; produce should if possible be sent abroad; few kinds of work in his district; governors should find work and submit samples to Commissioners for approval; satisfactory results of washing at Gloucester for infirmaries, &c., under his governorship, 9816–29.

(d) Organization of.

Mr. Rowland Bailey.—The reason for the discontinuance of the supply of various articles (principally mats, baskets, and tin-ware) is mainly want of organisation. It was arranged with the prisons that a stock of articles should be kept, but this was not carried into effect. The present state of things could not exist if prison industries received proper attention at the board; everything is subservient to discipline; the governors have no object in keeping a manufacture, and the warders (witness speaks now from personal observation) lack interest, receiving nothing for superintending prison industries, 11,157–61, 11,166, 11,169–70. There should be no difficulty in allocating the industries to the proper centres, but this is not done; tin paper-trays should not be made at Portland, nor baskets for Government use at Dartmoor, but in London; then there was the proposal to do washing for the public offices at Manchester, 11,162–4. Carpet-beating not unhealthy; feels sure the difficulties raised came from the staff, 11,167–9. A highly responsible official in the prisons department should be entrusted with the organisation of labour, according to local requirements, and the individual capacities of prisons to produce certain articles, 11,180–4.

Col. J. T. Barrington.—Explanation of, and suggestions as to, arrangements for manufacture and delivery of stores by the Prisons Department, see 11,467–72.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Care should be taken in distributing work suitable for the long and short sentence prisoners; this would be facilitated by a more systematic grouping of prisoners, 6433–8. A store depôt would secure greater punctuality in the execution of prison orders, 6439–42.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Would be glad to extend prison labour, which is not perhaps at present arranged to the best advantage; to make one particular official responsible would be good, but not necessarily better than the present responsibility of the Commissioners; more openings for work wanted, 10,546–54.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—The organization of work generally is open to improvement, 10,321–6.

And see "Prison Labour" and "Prisoners Available for Trades."

PRISON LABOUR.

Dr. Ancrum.—In favour of associated prison labour but not at the outset. The principle introduced by Maconochie is better. Separate treatment at first, 9252.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Labour in associated workshops only advisable when prisoners have served some time, and masses of local prisoners are only in for periods up to three weeks, 10,834–44.

Mr. James Duncan.—Productive labour beneficial; does not attach much importance to strict isolation in regard to the work of prisons, 4423–4. Strongly in favour of a substitute for the treadwheel, 4426–7. Oakum picking should be strictly confined to penal purposes; it is viewed by prisoners as a degrading form of occupation, and an alternative form of employment is being sought for, 4428–34.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Has strong views as to the advantage of. Cites case of Wormwood Scrubs which was built by convicts, and is a record of prison labour, 6419–20. Not afraid of contamination resulting from associated labour if you have classification and supervision, 6421–3, 6426. The convicts who built Wormwood Scrubs were trained by skilled instructors, 6424–5. Opposed to treadwheel, which involves premature association of prisoners, and is not deterrent, 6502. Explains cases in which prisoners are kept to No. 1 hard labour beyond the statutory period, 11,672–5.

Mr. Chas. Hall.—Agriculture and gardening good work for prisoners, 4633; the prison garden supplies all vegetables, 4634–42; is not highly penal work, 4690, 4691, but suitable for first offenders, and it is not considered light, 4696, 4697; and tasks could be proportioned for town prisoners and agricultural labourers, 4759–63.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Oakum picking not followed at Wandsworth if any other form of employment is available, number of oakum pickers reduced of late, sack making for private firms having been started, 4111–5; digging could only be introduced by extending prison area, building large wall, and adding to prison staff, 4123; necessity for real form of hard labour, crank and treadwheel therefore upheld. The first month only of prisoner's sentence given over to hard labour; 85*l.* a year saved by pumping water, 4116–25.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Prison labour at Dartmoor almost entirely associated, 8724. Of the 1,030 convicts 300 are employed on the farm, 8725–26. Of this number 80 would be employed reclaiming land (1,050 acres are under cultivation and about 950 acres require to be reclaimed), and 14 are engaged building a wall as part and parcel of the reclamation of the land, 8727–29. Work on the land a very good form of prison labour, 8734. A convict is kept to his own occupation, but he sometimes considers it a grievance that he is not allowed on the farm instead, 8732–39. When farm labour is interfered with by the weather, stone-breaking, and oakum-picking or other indoor labour is resorted to, 8905–15. No unproductive labour except (as a punishment) the crank, 8740–41.

Major James Knox.—Not in favour of unproductive labour, 7920, 7930–31. No crank in the cells at Leeds, 7922. The treadwheel grinds the whole meal for Stafford, Derby, and Wakefield, and for witness's use, 7921.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Absolutely unproductive labour should be abolished, or at all events never imposed, except as it is in convict prisons by way of a special punishment. For prisoners under sentences too short to admit of their being taught a trade, labour not useless but purely mechanical seems the very last resource; but for all others work requiring some intelligence should be found. The lowest class of useful labour—the treadmill which grinds. It may be necessary to remove prisoners to a greater extent away from the prisons near which their friends reside, 11,512–5. Wherever it can be managed it would be a great advantage to employ prisoners in outside labour. The extra cost involved should not be allowed to prevent this being done, 11,517.

Rev. J. B. Manning.—As to labour, about one-fourth of prisoners in Pentonville in association at treadmill, in workshops, laundry, bakehouse, &c., 815–22; no great belief in reformatory influence of associated labour, 823–825; no unproductive labour at Pentonville; would welcome introduction of suitable employment, e.g., matmaking, loss of which is much to be regretted, 826–844; some prisoners on entry physically quite unfit for skilled labour, 835; out-door agricultural work would be most valuable, specially for juveniles and the weak-minded, 1045; the maximum hours of hard labour not too high, 838–840.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Utterly opposed to useless labour except for tramps and vagabonds, 6295–96. Open-air work advocated, 6338–40; especially in cases where a tendency to mental disease is apparent, 6341–44.

Col. Plummer.—Borstal exists to make fortifications for Chatham. In addition, there are the shops for prison work, such as a little tailoring (chiefly mending), a little carpentering, and the mending of tools for the War Department, 8982–85. About 15 men are engaged on the farm of 70 acres; a very satisfactory form of employment, 8987–90. No unproductive work except as a punishment. No provision for trades at Borstal; this a serious weakness, 8992–93. Would be very sorry to see the crank done away with; very valuable as a punishment, 9011–12.

Mr. E. Witheford.—Labour employed at Dorchester is treadwheel for first-class labour, and oakum-picking and ordinary work about the prison for second class, 3971–78; prisoners not employed on ground round prison, 3992–95.

PRISON POPULATION.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Decrease in number of prisoners under present system attributed to education, the great safeguard in the future, and to the working of the "Summary Jurisdiction Act" and "First Offenders Act," 9793–97, 9805, 9961; good effect of sending prisoners abroad, 9801.

PRISONERS' AID SOCIETIES.

Dr. Ancrum.—Prisoners' Aid Society at Gloucester quite independent of Government, and more than adequate, 9252–57.

Col. Barker (Salvation Army.)—The Salvation Army desires to be placed on an equality with other agencies, 8284, 8293–94. Measures should be taken to prevent unscrupulous prisoners taking advantage of different societies, 8286–92. Co-operation necessary, 8293. A number of agencies but few prisoners' homes in England, 8292. A notice should be handed to each prisoner before discharge giving the names of societies willing to help; representatives from special societies should be allowed access to the prison on certain week-days in addition to the ordinary visiting committee, 8295. The advantages enjoyed by the Army over other aid societies, better appliances and more agents, 8454–56; more highly organised, 8457. Communication with prisoners prior to discharge very desirable; a great help abroad, 8279–81, 8460–62, 8474. Failing this, prisoners should be allowed to put their names down to be met at the prison gate, and this should be communicated to the Army, 8475. Visiting and conducting service in prisons at Kimberley and Cape Town explained, 8466–73.

Col. Buchanan (Secretary to the Royal Society for the Assistance of Discharged Prisoners.)—As to the society's origin and constitution, 7210; its connexion with Wormwood Scrubs, 7211–3, 7217; its competition and co-operation with other similar societies, 7214–6, 7223–4, 7269–76; its procedure in dealing with discharged prisoners, 7222, 7225; number of prisoners aided, 7279; its government grant, 7280–3. Is opposed to undue competition amongst prisoners and societies, 7263–8; amalgamation impracticable, 7277–8. Difficulty in dealing with habitual offenders, 7230–1. Importance of interview before discharge, 7225; and separation of discharged prisoner from old surroundings, 7229.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner.)—Prisoners need a home not money, on leaving prison. A large number of prisoners would, if they had a chance, go into the Salvation Army Home, 8592–96; and see 8661–64. Favours prisoner's gratuity being handed over to a home, 8595, 8647–49.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Has no knowledge of the working of these societies, but the prisoners' views, gathered in conversation, are not favourable; they say the societies are too much under the control of Scotland Yard, 1278.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Thinks it would be detrimental to allow more than one aid society access inside a prison; there should not be more than one accredited channel of communication between the prisoner and rescue agencies; let the prisoner if he likes select the agency he prefers, and let the recognised aid society of the prison communicate with that agency; individual agencies, such as the Salvation Army, do good, no doubt, but competition for a prisoner's favour is bad, 10,875–96; case of Mr. Wheatley, of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, from whom the privilege of standing under an archway was taken away because the Salvation Army claimed to have the same privilege, 10,899, 10,900.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict.)—Prisoners' Aid Societies satisfactorily distribute money earnt, 9678–84; powerless to aid habitual criminal, 9602.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Very efficient Prisoners' Aid Society at Wandsworth worked by visiting committee; several hours each week spent in considering cases; and the St. Giles' Mission Room is outside. If prisoners express a wish to see the agent of a particular society leave is granted, 4145–6.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—The Manchester Prisoners' Aid Society commenced its work at Strangeways in March 1894, and up to the 28th November of that year had helped 432 prisoners. An effective society, witness himself one of the agents, the other agent is outside the prison, Government grant 100*l.* a year, 7517–28. System explained, 7529–39, 7571–83.

Capt. F. Johnson.—In favour of opportunities being afforded to accredited officials to see prisoners before discharge. Agrees that anything which would give the societies a better hold on a prisoner should be encouraged, 8786–93. A home where a discharged prisoner could shelter for a time would be of benefit, 8929–30.

Major James Knox.—One society at Leeds and one at Bradford; admirable work done. The Leeds society has a very good male and a very good female agent, who visit the prison every morning and see prisoners before they leave. It was the custom at Leeds before witness's time for these agents to be allowed inside in the prison. At Gloucester witness had authority from the Commissioners to allow such visits, 8024–31; and see 8249–55.

Miss E. Little.—No lady visitor ever at Strangeways, 5176; work of Prisoners' Aid Societies explained, 5178–83.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Attaches very great importance (perhaps more than most people) to the action of these societies; they could to a certain extent be helped by the visiting committee taking a personal interest in the prisoners; this help to be efficient must consist of a methodical sifting of the antecedents of prisoners about to leave prison, 11,392; hitherto the work of these societies, except so far as formal communications with the governors are concerned, has been altogether outside the sphere of prison administration; and witness is inclined to think it had better remain so; they should be more sub-divided, however, and in some respects have greater facilities allowed them, 11,485. Recognises the evil of societies competing for prisoners; arrangements might be made by the governor for an equitable distribution of work amongst the various societies; good work might be done in aiding families of prisoners during their detention, 11,487; agrees that more inter-communication between societies for the purpose of identifying criminals who make an improper use of the societies is necessary, 11,488–90.

Mrs. Meredith (Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society for Female Prisoners).—For 25 years engaged in mission work. Prison Commissioners are communicated with, and women are also met at the prison gate by one of the Sisters and are asked if they want employment, 5678–87. Industry followed is laundry work; average takings 100*l.* to 150*l.* a week; require 80 or 100 women daily, could find work for 200, but cannot get the women, and a few paid hands are necessarily employed, 5688–91; laundry established at cost of 6,000*l.* or 8,000*l.*, anxious for public support to recover heavy outlay; quite self-supporting, but not profitable, owing to unremunerative nature of the work, 5692–3; 78 women at present employed, mostly from Holloway; of this number 12 are convicts; this class preferred because of their prison training, 5694–7, 5707–10; the women are sent to lodging-houses in the neighbourhood, the society guaranteeing cost of lodging; has always been opposed to their living in the institution, 5698; system works well, but under no circumstances are two women placed in one house, 5716; they earn 1*s.* a day, of which 4*d.* is stopped to pay for lodging; women paid each night; is afraid the 8*d.* is spent on beer, 5716–26; there is a penny bank, however, and those who will may put in money once a week, buying clothes from the institution with the amount saved, 5728–30; after two years hopeful cases are helped to buy furniture, 5730–1. Hours 8 a.m. till 7 p.m.; meals supplied (but no drink) out of the Prison Mission Fund subscribed to by the public, 5701–4; women perfectly free to leave when work is finished; would be glad, however, of police supervision, though the fact that the women work until they are tired is a safeguard, and further they are refused admittance in the morning if they do not arrive before 8 o'clock (prayer time), 5699–700; if a woman leaves to resume evil habits the police are informed, and the society has nothing more to do with her until a further sentence has been served, 5744–6. Some women go from 10 to 12 years with no breakdown; so long as work can be provided and the women be made to feel comfortable they keep from prison, 5705–6. See also 5744. Result of work perfectly satisfactory, 5747.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—A number of Prisoners' Aid Societies at Holloway; there is practically provision for every case where assistance is asked for by the prisoner; he is allowed to make his own choice of the agency to help him, 1542–44, 1561–66.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Ladies attached to Prisoners' Aid Societies should be allowed under conditions to visit female prisoners and boys under 16, 3062, 3368, 3369; there are women visitors now in certain cases, 3463*a*–66. Present system of Prisoners' Aid Societies works satisfactorily, 3064–68. Dangers in allowing a prisoner to see list of all societies willing to help him, and to make a choice, 3069–3072.

Col. Plummer.—Prisoners' Aid Societies not supported by the public as they ought to be; each society would benefit by a small capitation grant; and they should be allowed better opportunities of seeing prisoners before discharge, 8975–80.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Methods of Prisoners' Aid Societies open to improvement; there should be uniformity and the chaplain should always act as honorary secretary, 10,038–41; in favour of adding to list more rescue homes for female prisoners and admitting to prisons all representatives of societies officially recognised by Home Secretary, 10,060–65; so too with rescue agencies generally, e.g., Salvation Army, for such agencies the only hope for recidivists, 10,295–308.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—As to Prisoners' Aid Societies, witness disagrees with a minute of an inspector requiring agents to apply to the Commissioners in first instance, and would allow any bonâ fide society access at governor's discretion, 2570–81.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—As to Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, 128–30, 562–67; recent Home Office circular as to these societies, 131–9; fact that prisoners desiring help from other agencies than the aid society specially attached to the prison have to apply through that society places great responsibility in its hands; to this there are objections, 140–44; danger of allowing societies to compete for prisoners, 145, 146; no objection to let prisoners before discharge see list of agencies and make his choice, 147.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—The York Castle Prisoners' Aid Society, with fund of 50*l.* per annum, besides subscriptions from magistrates, &c. (no Government grant), does much good; of 1,300 men passed through the prison 300 or 400 have been assisted; agent sees prisoners before they leave in their cells or in governor's or chaplain's office on permission from governor, but only such prisoners as are recommended by chaplain, who is honorary secretary of society; equally satisfactory arrangements at Aylesbury and Knutsford, 9399–9410; good done rests in great measure with governor, 9539, 9540; approves suggestion that matron should act as unpaid agent in case of female prisoners; even with 200 prisoners in her charge could give time to work of society, 9541–45.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Receptions at Liverpool average about 20,000 a year, and the total number aided in 1892–3 by Prisoners' Aid Society was 581; there is in addition a branch of the Church of England Temperance Society which meets prisoners on discharge, 1844–52, 1958–60; approves suggestion that prisoner should be enabled to see a list of agencies willing to help him, 1853–56.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Good done by societies only temporary, 9867–68.

PRISONERS AVAILABLE FOR TRADES.

Mr. James Duncan.—Of the total prison population, 3,825 are on first-class hard labour; 3,261 are non-effective; domestic service engages 2,450; and 35 per cent. or 5,077 remain, of which number it is already possible to employ 3,004. A proportion of the residue, 2,073 (classed as oakum pickers) would under improved system, be taken for industrial pursuits, and the output of the 3,004 would be increased, still there would be no ground for agitation as the increased interference with outside labour would amount only to ·04 per cent., 4462, 4478–81, 4482–4. Or, taking into account the fact that the amount of work done by a prisoner is much less than that performed by a free workman, ·02 per cent., or 1 in 5,000 workers would be the more reliable figures. These figures refer only to the particular trades proposed to be increased, the addition to the present number of workers being estimated at 1,100. Estimates the total present interference with outside labour at ·053 per cent., or 1 prisoner to every 1,886 free workmen; the total interference after proposed increase of prison workers would be ·063 per cent., or 1 to every 1,587. See 11,799–808.

PRISONS BOARD.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Regular Board meetings not often held, as they are not often required; system works automatically, 11,005–8.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—The general administration of prisons might be improved in one or two particulars; too great importance cannot be attached to the personnel; everything should be done to secure the utmost influence of the Commissioners on the governors and superior officers, and of the governors upon the officers and all the warders. In the local as distinguished from the convict prisons the Commissioners rarely inspect themselves, and the inspection by the inspectors is not altogether satisfactory; for they can never have the same personal influence on the governor and warders as a commissioner; one inspection from a Commissioner would be worth three or four from an inspector. If necessary there might be an additional Commissioner in lieu of the inspectors. Some of the Commissioners' visits should be surprise visits, others would be pre-arranged; in the latter case a notification should be sent to the visiting committee to give them an opportunity of attending. The Commissioners and the visiting committees should be brought into as close contact as possible, 11,417. A periodical revision of prison administration by an independent body has been suggested; is quite certain that a yearly revision would degenerate into a mere form, but advocates an occasional revision, the Secretary of State to nominate members from time to time; in the intervals the revising body to be non-existent, 11,414–6.

Mrs. Meredith.—Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, an excellent lecturer, would be useful on the Prison Commission to regulate such matters as visiting, reading, &c. by volunteers, 5777–8.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—As to constitution and duties of the Board, 10,555–59, 10,561–67, 10,592, 10,593, 10,595, 10,596. Chairman is accounting officer and responsible for expenditure, 10,568–73; he would not necessarily discuss with the Board the proposed closing of a prison, 10,574–84. Officials below governor and deputy-governor appointed by chairman and his private secretary as head of the staff department, 10,585–94; Board does not always meet to consider the report of the Commissioners; practically it is drawn up by the chairman, 10,625–28.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Constitution and procedure of Board of Directors and Commissioners, 14–23, 542–46; paper work and visiting greatest part of business, 24–26; convict prisons visited by directors once a month, local prisons by inspectors once in two months, and by Commissioners once a year, 27–31; treatment of prisoners' complaints, 32–36; final appeal by prisoner to Secretary of State, 37, 38; punishment of prisoners, 39–48.

PUNISHMENTS AND OFFENCES.

Dr. Brayn.—Caution usually given for first offence, then separate confinement, then loss of marks or privileges, 4877, 4896; outbreaks of disorder occasional, 4874; handcuffs never used, loose canvas restraint jacket used for protection, not punishment, 4896–99.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Prohibition of speech absolutely indefensible; a fruitful source of offence against prison rules, and an encouragement to deceit and cunning, helping to keep in activity practices and faculties peculiar to the criminal class, 11,318.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Approves of No. 1 punishment diet; it is controlled by the medical officer, 10,847–49; besides case of "J. E.," apparently sentenced by the visiting committee to an illegal punishment, which, however, was never carried out, recollects a case of illegally placing in irons, to prevent recurrence of which Secretary of State was asked to make a rule, 11,001–5.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Four cases of suicide at Portsmouth attributed to severity of punishment, 9660, 9661, 9726–38; also cases of malingering at Chatham and Portland, 9664, 9755–61; punishments for speaking, three or four a day at Portsmouth; talking when necessary at work sometimes leads to punishment; convict entirely at mercy of officer, 9719–23; punishments at Portsmouth for not keeping step when going to chapel, 9640–2: malingering he believes to be due to severity of punishment; instances at Chatham and Portland, 9664, 9755–61. For Prisons Board reply, see Appendix IX.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—On the subject of prison punishment, points out the impossibility of instituting a reliable comparison between one prison and another, the classes of inmates differ, and so do the classes of punishments—cumulative in some prisons, not in others, 6685–92, 6756–9. No reason why the inspectors should not certify that they have examined the punishment book; they virtually do this now. Witness explains the perfect system of check on the governor that prison punishments are strictly correct, adequate, and legal. This system obtains in every convict prison, and in local prisons as regards convicts. The same system should be extended to the local prisons, 11,747, 11,777–8.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Approves of the plank-bed, but not of flogging, which should be avoided if possible, 7394–97; favours suspension of privileges rather than the penal method, 7398; would not give three days bread and water for a first offence, unless a very serious case; too severe punishments defeat their own purpose; no revolt amongst prisoners at Strangeways, 7736–40.

Major James Knox.—Would allow publicity to the trial by visiting justices of such offences as may entail corporal punishment, 8147–50.

Miss E. Little.—Salutary effect of withdrawal from associated work; very little trouble caused by breaking of prison rules, 5093–97.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Dietary punishments, if strictly limited, the least objectionable. The system of marks seems well adapted to diminish the number of special punishments, but defective in stopping short when the full gratuity has been earned. If there are objections (witness is not aware of any) to extending the system in this direction, it would be advantageous that a prisoner with more than a seven months sentence should, like a convict, be able to earn some remission. To meet the case of violently refractory prisoners, visiting committees might be empowered to add to a sentence, within very strict limits, say not more than a period equal to the original sentence or not more than a month, whichever was the least, 11,518.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Present system of punishments satisfactory; they should be light and short, but progressive, 776–79; cannot go far with dietary punishment, 783; flogging should only be a last resort, 784–86, 1134; no punishment cell at Pentonville, 792, 793; magistrates more inclined to inflict severe punishment than governors, but the system works well, 788, 789; power of governor is not too limited, nor does it call for further limitation, 790, 791.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Cannot account for higher punishment rate in English than in Irish prisons, especially with regard to flogging, 10,689–704; nor for higher death-rate, 10,705.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Three times as many offences in local as in convict prisons, 3074–77; many produced by nature of prison life and degrading labour, 3073; by action of indiscreet or inexperienced officers, 3078, 3089; outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs arose from indiscreet handling of prison, e.g., in inflicting undue punishment, 3078–84; see case of prisoner J. E——, 3085–95, 3443–63, 3532–34; flogging, how ordered and carried out, 3535–42; recommendations in respect of prison offences, 3096; diet should be improved, 3096, 3097, 3331; hours of officers should be shortened, and power of prison directors to inflict punishment abolished, 3097; doubts wisdom of suggestion that in case of women a light form of leather handcuff should be substituted for penal diet, 3098–3100.

Col. Plummer.—Proportion of punishments to prison population has materially decreased in the past 10 years; in Borstal to a marvellous extent, 9002–3. 220 convicts in 1893 went unpunished, 8995–99, 9014–16. Cases of corporal punishment at Borstal accounted for by the periodical outbreak of certain prisoners. Irish statistics under this head very remarkable; difficult to account for absence of corporal punishment for a whole year, 9019–31.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—As to prison offences, more frequent with those imprisoned for the first time, and in early stages, than with habituals, 2582–83. Governor has sufficient discretion, 2584; thinks some punishments inflicted by visiting justices, e.g., 14 days on No. 1 punishment diet, too severe, 2585–90; in connexion with prison offences, prisoners at Wandsworth allowed to call other prisoners as witnesses, 3128–31. Would abolish plank bed except as special punishment, 3162, 3163, 3241–44.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Would give visiting committee power to punish prison offences by extending term of imprisonment, 2630–38; punishment at Birmingham very slight, and this policy is right, 2635, 2686–87; governor might have discretionary power to relax punishment, 2693–700; would abolish dark cell, 2638.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Regulations governing prison offences and book of rules, 148; rules based partly upon Act of 1865 and partly upon Act of 1877, 149–52; rules always read to prisoners, 153–56; no complaints from prisoners as to insufficient information about rules, 157; chief offenders against prison rules from the idle class of prisoners, 158; habitual criminals more amenable to prison rules, 159–60; average number of offences against rules by female prisoners less than by males, 161;

"breaking out" not common with men but still prevalent among a certain class of women, 162–64; "dark cell" system has been abolished, 167; variations in number of punishments in local prisons, 168–69; prisoners in agricultural districts better behaved than those in manufacturing districts, 170; different results with different governors of prisons, and different systems of management, 171–79; London prisoners show more offences than country, 172; limitation of governor's power to punish, 180; limited by Act of 1877 and Standing Orders, e.g., No. 94, 181–84; Act of 1877 diminished the powers of governors with respect to confinement in punishment cell, 185; no disadvantage resulted from this diminution, 186–87; recommendations of Royal Commission of 1878 not acted upon as far as English prisons are concerned, 188–89; no necessity for acting upon them, 190.

RECIDIVISM.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—The present system has been so far deterrent that of those who once enter prison two-thirds do not come back, 10,841, 10,842.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—It is after 16 that the real criminal age begins; instances in support of this view; criminal habits rather than criminal instincts the cause, 1558–60, 1567–69. Does not consider proportion of re-committals to be relatively large; those who come back to prison come back frequently, 1588–93, 1610, 1611; short sentences partly the cause of increase of committals and re-committals, 1612–15; these short sentences have done good as regards first offenders, but cumulative sentences advisable in case of habituals, 1616–19.

Mr. C. E. Troup.—Previous convictions of prisoners: 55 per cent. of persons convicted at assizes and quarter sessions in 1893 had one or more previous convictions (this percentage refers to a total of 9,600 cases, see 11,586); the proportion, however, in only 48 per cent., when all previously convicted prisoners, whether tried at assizes, quarter sessions, or by courts of summary jurisdiction are taken into account; probably, however, a good many escape identification. In 2,988 cases the previous convictions had been on indictment, and in 2,347 on summary process only, 11,569–71. In London, the proportion having previous convictions recorded against them is only 47 per cent., as against 70 per cent. in Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Staffordshire, 79 per cent. in the boroughs of Liverpool, Birmingham, and Bradford, and 61 per cent. in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk; which seems to show that in an enormous place like London the police are less able to trace a prisoner's previous history, and to record his convictions, 11,572–8. Proportion of second to first convictions for 1893 is 28 per cent.; very little increase, 11,592–3. For figures showing large increase in the number of prisoners having several previous convictions (due, partly at any rate, to improved means of identification) see 11,594–11,601. Proportion of re-committals in different classes of crime. Offences against the person, 30 per cent.; offences against property, with violence, 66 per cent., and without violence, 64 per cent.; malicious injuries to property, 42 per cent.; forgery and coining 37 per cent.; other offences in Class VI., 25 per cent. Offences particularised: larceny, 79 per cent.; simple larceny, 78 per cent.; burglary and housebreaking and kindred offences, 66 per cent.; robbery, 64 per cent.; false pretences, 44 per cent.; receiving stolen goods, 47; 11,579–80. Sir E. Du Cane's figures very forcibly point to an improved system of identification rather than to an increase of recidivism, 11,637–42; a great advance in the last 10 years in this system at Scotland Yard, also at Birmingham, 11,643–4.

"REDHILL REFORMATORY."

Mr. John Trevarthen.—History of the Reformatory (based on that of Mettray, in France, the institution being broken up into families), 2736–48; admissions to Redhill (about half from London and half from southern counties) are confined as far as possible to the worst cases of criminal boys, practically habitual criminals, 2749, 2763, 2812, 2879–88; would be glad, as before Reformatory Act, to take boys under conditional pardon, 2738–41, 2836; in their five houses attempt some classification of older and younger boys, and boys of different characters, 2764, 2852, 2853; have some youths up to 21, though Act of 1893 will prevent boys being detained in future after 19, 2765–69; boys of mature age retained for their own sake, not, as suggested by Mr. Rogers (in alleging scanty use of license system), because they are profitable, 2770–73; if older boys are taken, Treasury grant should be increased, 2796–98; school has no large annual income, and has suffered severely from agricultural depression, 2799, 2800; Redhill compares unfavourably with other schools as to licenses, because of the number who are emigrated or passed into the Army, 2774, 2775, 2877; of licenses at Redhill about one-fifth revoked; the cases give no special trouble afterwards, 2873–76; disapproves of Act of 1893 limiting age for detention to 19, 2775–77; would extend age for reception up to 18, 2778, 2779; does not consider 60 youths of from 17 to 20 necessarily an unmanageable item in one house, 2854, 2859; would not be afraid to attempt reform of habitual criminals between 16 and 21, 2889–92. An institution half-way between reformatory and prison might be useful, but objects to the name "penal reformatory," 2893–97; Redhill system of classification by houses might be extended to a system of classification by schools, for senior cases over 15 on admission, and for junior cases under 15 on admission, 2780–87; does not mean that a boy under 15 on admission should be transferred when over 15; each school should have a variety of ages within certain limits, 2870, 2871; no use a boy coming for less than three years, 2786. outbreak at Gladstone House, Redhill, in 1892, not serious; ringleaders have turned out well, 2847, 2848. Punishment used at Redhill: birching, caning, and cell confinement on bread and water for about a couple of days; this last very rare, 2849–51; house staff at Redhill consists of schoolmaster, who is as it were father of the family, and labour master; but there is a general superintendent for each department of the school, and there is a gymnasium which has been of immense service, 2855–59, 2916; there are, as a rule, three dormitories for the 60 boys in each house, 2860; keeps record of cases discharged, and, taking an average of 10 years, finds about 92 per cent. doing well, about 7 per cent. re-convicted, and a little over 1 per cent. unknown, 2791–96, 2878.

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Strongly in favour of raising the age of admission to 18, and the establishment of a half-way house between the reformatory and the prison, 11,259–63.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Prefers to leave reformatories in the hands of voluntary agencies, but no reason why a Government reformatory should not be successful, 10,919, 10,920; doubtful about advisability of raising age for reformatories from 16 to 18; age a very uncertain test; but a special reformatory on the Parkhurst lines for the older and bad lads a good idea, 10,936–38; Parkhurst Reformatory was a farm establishment for juveniles sentenced to long terms; it was not a failure, but died out in consequence of the establishment of reformatories all over the country under the Act of 1863, 10,914–18; figures to show large proportion of criminals between 16 and 21 years of age, 10,939, 10,940; to young offenders a long sentence to a reformatory might be more deterrent than a short sentence to prison, 10,941, 10,942; to the Government or penal reformatory might be transferred, on a magistrate's order, boys who could not be coped with by the voluntary agency, 10,943–45.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—If you raise age for admission to reformatories up to 18, you must have classification, so as to separate the older lads from young boys, 6481–3.

Mr. R. Gorst (Secretary of National Association of Certified Reformatory and Industrial Schools, representing two-thirds of schools under Government inspection).—Redhill the leading institution of its kind, 6117–8; agrees with Mr. Trevarthen that age for admission for both boys and girls should be raised to 18, and limit for detention (lowered by Lord Leigh's Act) raised to 21, 6111–6, 6189–92; if age raised, Treasury grant must be increased, 6153–4, 6157; in favour of boys being purged by punishment before their admission to reformatory, and there should be an interval to be passed in houses of detention (as a substitute for prison), under county councils, where the boys might be sifted and the proper school found for each, 6119–29, 6141, 6155, 6203; penal and reformatory elements should be separated, 6212–30. Association does not think having been in a reformatory, with preliminary imprisonment, leaves a taint interfering with subsequent employment, but English and Scotch opinion differs on the subject, 6146–50, 6204–7; chief sources of income to reformatories the Government and the local authority grants; these, with earnings from labour, make most self-supporting, 6130–3; there are 50 reformatories, not too many, although, of late, admissions have been falling off, 6134–5; falling off due to sentiment against sending children to prison, a difficulty now removed, 6208–9, 6220–1; believes that from 80 to 86 per cent. of boys who have passed through reformatories lead honest lives; inquiries on the subject are carefully made, 6136–40; not generally true that managers are tempted to keep older boys longer than necessary because of their earnings, 6142; in cases of long sentences favours a power of conditional discharge in managers' hands for emigration, &c., 6143–5; reformatories should be classified as schools for boys and girls between 10 and 12 or 14, and between 14 and 18, and for cripples, &c., 6151–2; such classification essential if age is to be raised, though the classification might be contrived by having entirely separate houses in the same school, 6193–6202; schools necessary for cripples, &c., in order to receive boys ill-suited to industrial training and therefore rejected by ordinary reformatories, 6231–6, 6242–4; some reformatories more successful than others in a pecuniary sense, but knows of none where a profit realised is appropriated to private uses, 6162–71; not aware of any special observation as to insanity in reformatories, 6172–4; very little exists beyond moral insanity, which, however, he regards as something more than the result of some physical defect, 6175–6; admits that some reformatories show better results than others; this due to some being more favourably circumstanced than others as to the material they get, and their means of disposing of it afterwards; also, perhaps, to character of manager, and structure of buildings, e.g., the exceptional means of classification at Redhill cannot but lead to good results, 6177–84. as to failures, there must be a certain percentage of incurables; dishonesty the main cause of failure, 6185–8; objects to penal reformatories except as a special institution, with severe discipline, to which unmanageable boys can be drafted, 6212, 6222, 6226. Association is anxious to memorialise Home Secretary on the danger of too much use of voluntary homes not under Government control, and the confusion in magistrates' minds as to the spheres of the different classes of schools, 6240–1; and is in favour of a power to Secretary of State to transfer cases from an industrial to a reformatory school and vice versâ, 6240.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—On question of extending age of admission thinks a separate institution would be necessary; a working-class boy between 16 and 17, generally speaking, has acquired all the habits and notions of a man, and should not mix with the younger boys, 4153–8; no objection to experiment of some kind of reformatory treatment for persons over 16 being made, 4202–7.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Is satisfied with the present age limit; prisoners from reformatories the most troublesome, 7348–57. A very complete system of classification essential, 7362–63. Thinks, with proper treatment, the prison is a better reforming agency for boys and girls between 16 and 21 than the reformatory, 7365, 7372–74, 7540–43, 7596–7601. As much good might be done in prison in three months under judicious treatment as in a reformatory school under a four years' term, 7602–5. It is the herding together of bad boys in reformatories which does the mischief, 7606; see also 7607–12. Favours the idea of a Government penal reformatory, a mid-way house between the prison and the reformatory, 7383–89. Why Parkhurst was a failure, 7390–91.

Major James Knox.—Does not favour a hard and fast rule as to age, but would take from the prison as many of the younger prisoners as possible and detain them in reformatories; advocates separate institutions for the younger boys and girls, 7896–7911. It should be possible to transfer an offender who is incorrigible from a reformatory to a prison, 7916.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Not in favour of a Government reformatory where boys could be subjected to a long period of penal treatment without the stigma of having been in prison; a new Parkhurst would be a prison in another name, 11,494; witness's objections extend to a penal reformatory for a rather older class of youthful offender; does not share the view that such an establishment would have a reforming influence; as it is, reformatory managers notoriously keep the boys too long, 11,496–7; and they are anxious to extend the age of detention, 11,497; this, witness would not accede to, 11,502; agrees that the system of conducting Redhill reformatory is the right one, 11,500; witness, asked whether his views as to reformatories were due to their not having been well administered during the last 20 years, replied:—"No, I should not like to say that; I would "rather say that at its best the life offered by a "reformatory has most serious defects, however "vigilant and kindly managers may be; that these "defects are liable to be aggravated by special "causes, as by insufficiency of funds, or by the "inmates being too numerous for good manage" ment, or, in rare instances, by remissness on " the part of the managers," 11,551.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Reformatories have done great good, 910.

Mr. Henry Rogers (Assistant Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools).—Fifty-one reformatory schools, 140 industrial schools, 22 day industrial schools, 14 truant schools, 2380–82; the different characters of the two classes of schools to be noticed in the two sets of boys, 2383–86; preliminary imprisonment a barrier to committals to reformatory schools, 2387–89; feeling as to this stronger in Scotland than in England, 2390–92; though prison not always bad for a boy about to go to a reformatory, thinks after 40 years' experience you can get on as well without it, 2393–95; boys less criminal now, old training gangs broken up, 2396–402, 2534; very few incurably bad, and the younger the more hopeful the case, 2535–37; for special cases age of admission might be extended to 18, 2403, 2404; this involves classification, e.g., schools for those above 16 on admission, and for those below 16; no difficulty in this, 2405–17, 2423–37, 2528; license system not so much used as it should be; older boys kept because they are profitable, 2418–23, 2450–76, 2481–87; therefore approves Act of 1890 limiting age of detention to 19, 2449; effect of that Act, 2518, 2519; reformatory schools a great success; at the lowest estimate 70 per cent. reclaimed, 2438–46, 2522; various reasons for different success of different schools, 2496–503; if older boys taken necessary to increase Government grant, 2447, 2448; present voluntary system works better than would one more under official management, 2477–80; reformatories supported by Government grant of 6*s.* per head, by grant from committing authority, and by subscriptions, which have of late fallen off, 2484–87; knows of no case of Home Office actually revoking the certificate of a reformatory, though it has happened in the case of Industrial Schools, 2488, 2489; objects strongly to the mixture of reformatory and industrial school cases at Feltham, 2490–95; thinks limit of size for a reformatory should be 60, 2507; agricultural training invaluable for improving physique, 2508–12; would not give sedentary occupation, or anything like oakum picking, or the crank to boys, 2523–25; some boys do follow trades learnt in a reformatory, 2513, 2514; needlework, knitting, and machine work good for the girls, 2515; boys and girls invariably drilled to improve physique, 2516, 2517; does not think grave abuses in the way of punishment exist; there is corporal punishment, and every punishment is registered, but discipline mostly carried on by marks and rewards for labour, 2529–33, 2538.

Mr. John Trevarthen.—Results of reformatory system successful on the whole, 2837, 2838; boys should be kept as long as necessary, even to last hour of sentence, 2839, 2840; aggregation of large numbers is a mistake, 2841, 2842. As to labour, farm training pre-eminently the best, both morally and physically, 2843–46. Act of 1893, abolishing necessity for prior imprisonment, mistaken policy; and has caused confusion. There must be an interval between the sentence and the finding of a reformatory; some boys are actually sent for some days to a workhouse despite danger of contamination, 2801–809, 2889, 2898–908. True that the objection to imprisonment was crippling reformatories, but the First Offenders Act, and the too free use of " voluntary homes " has had much to do with it, 2813–23, 2868, 2869; believes that he represents generally the views of reformatory masters, 2788–90; as regards prior imprisonment certainly represents views of South of England, though not perhaps of the North and of Scotland, 2901–903. Admits that varieties in rules of reformatories (some taking only the mildest cases under the Reformatory Act), introduces confusion between reformatory and industrial schools; the real distinction between them should be accentuated, 2824–29. Defines criminal class of boys not by number of convictions, but by character; bad boys may long elude conviction; not surprised that there are many such boys in Poor Law schools; pauper lads going to Redhill generally unsatisfactory, 2830–35. Not many boys who would be rejected by all reformatories as unfit for industrial training; hardly enough to justify a special institution, which would be difficult to work, 2862–67; class of boys in reformatories largely those whose environment has led them astray; in happier domestic circumstances would have turned out as well as others, 2912–15.

Mr. W. Wheatley.—Advocates raising age of admission to 18; provision for more classification and separation of classes, 7126; preference for " ship " as a reformatory, 7185; necessity for relegating " runaways " to " ships," 7198, 7203–5; in sufficient ships, 7199–202.

For physical and mental condition of children in industrial and other schools. Appendix III., Table VIII. (p. 538).

REFORMATORY INFUENCE OF PRESENT PRISON TREATMENT.

Col. Barker (Salvation Army).—Present treatment of criminals a failure so far as reformatory influence is concerned. More discrimination and individual attention needed, 8299–304.

Dr. Brayn.—Reformatory effect of prison discipline only occasional; Woking prisoners mostly incorrigible, many with 40 or more convictions, 4888.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Reformatory influence of present prison system nil, 8685–88.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—As to reformatory character of present prison system, points out the elements in prison life which seem to make for, and those which seem to make against, reformation, 11,480; does not think it possible to introduce a reformatory element into the prison, 11,481–3; the prison system should be simply punitive and deterrent; does not see how any effort to produce a contrary effect can be made successfully, 11,484–5. On the question of deterrence see 11,476–9. Witness says:—

" I regard as unfavourable to reformation the " status of a prisoner throughout his whole career; " the crushing of self-respect; the starving all " moral instinct he may possess; the absence of " all opportunity to do or receive a kindness; the " continual association with none but criminals, " and that only as a separate item amongst other " items also separate; the forced labour and the " denial of all liberty. I believe the true mode of " reforming a man or restoring him to society is " exactly in the opposite direction of all these. " But, of course, this is a mere idea. It is quite " impracticable in a prison. In fact, the un- " favourable features I have mentioned are in- " separable from prison life," 11,482.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Hopeful view as to reclamation of prisoners; has seen many reclaimed, 9438.

And see " Recidivism."

REMEDIAL MEASURES ADVOCATED.

Mr. Rowland Bailey.—A highly responsible official in the prisons department should be entrusted with the organisation of labour, according to local requirements, and the individual capacities of prisons to produce certain articles, 11,180–4.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Nine months' solitary confinement should be abolished, or failing this, reduced to one or two months at the beginning and the same period at the end of a sentence for first offenders, only the old offenders being sent at once to hard labour; by this means prisoners would have the benefit of such reformatory influence (visits from chaplain and schoolmaster) as could be brought to bear upon him just before his release, 11,197–11,201, 11,289–91, 11,311–3 11,322–5; witness's experience of solitary confinement, 11,284–8. " The irreclaimable class who are thieves by conviction " should be kept in a separate prison; these criminals in the process of time become men of very weak intellect; treatment recommended: not long or severe punishment (does not believe in cumulative sentences), but detention (with productive labour, 11,296–9) and such treatment as experts in mental diseases and kindred ailments would suggest; similar treatment to be extended to those guilty of larceny, petty theft, &c., if over 30 years of age, 11,211–9; under 25 or 30 they might be reclaimed; not much hope for "third timers," 11,214, 11,257–8. No belief in reclamation by punishment, 11,294–5. Strongly urges the re-institution of local control and the decentralization of the present system, much of the unnecessary harshness of the present system of penal servitude due to a too centralized control. Favours independent inspection of all prisons, the privilege to be extended to all Magistrates, Members of Parliament, and County Councillors, of visiting and reporting independently to the Home Office, 11,221–5, 11,350–2. As to punishments awarded by directors, some 16 or 18 years back, floggings at Dartmoor were very frequent and generally undeserved, 11,220; no appeal from sentence by a director; a local magistrate or justice of the peace, with concurrent authority or power to appeal to the Home Secretary to stay punishment, should be present when a case is being investigated by a director, 11,346–7. Prisoners, whether convict or local, should be far more leniently treated; conversation should be allowed as a reward for good behaviour when the third class is reached after 12 months' penal servitude; hardened offenders, however, to be kept apart, 11,211, 11,226–34, 11,319–21. Organised systems of communication exist, but these subterfuges would in a great measure cease if present rules were relaxed, 11,268–9. Prohibition of speech absolutely indefensible; a fruitful source of offence against prison rules, and an encouragement to deceit and cunning, helping to keep in activity practices and faculties peculiar to the criminal class, 11,318. A pipe of tobacco on Sunday for prisoners in the third, second, or first class would be a wonderful inducement to good behaviour, 11,235. Prisoners should be allowed to ornament their cell walls if they have the taste and ability, 11,319. Favours "shorter sentences all worked out" instead of long sentences of penal servitude. The ticket-of-leave should be reserved for old offenders; it operates against the first offender to have to report to the police, and this class should work out a short sentence instead; very strong grounds for complaints against detectives; has, in conversation with prisoners who have returned after a first conviction, heard frequent complaints as to not being allowed a fair chance on discharge, 11,314–5; even in the case of a third or fourth term prisoner would give governor, chaplain, and doctor power to recommend discharge without ticket given real evidence of reformation, 11,369, see also 11,374; objection to ticket-of-leave-system would fall through if regulations, which are admirable, were carried out, but they are not, 11,371–3.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Removals from one prison to another cannot be effected without Secretary of State's warrant, but there should be no difficulty with proper foresight; it would save the Secretary of State much trouble if Commissioners would sign the warrants, 11,024–26.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Advocates three or four years in local prison as an alternative to 10 years penal servitude, with two hours exercise a day and occasional permission to talk at exercise, 9746–54; six, or perhaps four years cellular confinement should be the longest term; evils of association avoided, 9764–71.

Major James Knox.—Would allow publicity to the trial by visiting justices of such offences as may entail corporal punishment, 8147–50.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—A circular should be issued to the visiting committees every year by the Secretary of State (at the beginning of the year, perhaps, rather than at the end, or there might be two circulars), specifying the principal features of prison administration upon which he requests full observations and suggestions; the reports with an analysis to be laid before Parliament, 11,404–7. A periodical revision of prison administration by an independent body has been suggested; is quite certain that a yearly revision would degenerate into a mere form, but advocates an occasional revision, the Secretary of State to nominate members from time to time; in the intervals the revising body to be non-existent, 11,414–6.

Mrs. Meredith.—Convicts should be found employment on leaving prison, and should be allowed partial freedom, not compelled to reside in a home; a kind of licence should be issued, and they should be under control for some months; would add a year of semi-independence to a five years' sentence, the woman to be detained in one neighbourhood where she should be sure of employment, 5748–51, 5762–6.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Would give governors discretionary power to allow more frequent intercourse between prisoners and reputable friends likely to do them good, 1532–38; but not too much to be expected from visits of philanthropic persons from outside, 1727–30; nearly all prisoners have some sense of shame, and this would be deepened as prisoner is elevated by such means, 1539–41.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Suggests form of return for insertion in Commissioners' Annual Report to show condition of each prison as to accommodation, 2949, 3469–74. And amendments of s. 17 of Act of 1865, 2950.

Col. Plummer.—Long-sentence convicts should have some relaxation of prison discipline during their last year; a small prison might be given over to this class, where those of over five years' sentence might be allowed more talking, and greatly increased visits to fit them for life outside, 8971–74; or, for the majority of prisoners (a small minority would refuse to take advantage thereof), an Aid Society's Home, if such a place could be found, would be equally beneficial; this last year would be very useful for the teaching of trades, 9032–45, 9059. Warders should be allowed to retire on pension after 26 years' service, 9009–10.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Strongly in favour of encouraging local magistrates to exercise their powers under Act of 1877, but supremacy of Home Secretary must be maintained, 10,022–25; Commissioners might arrange to meet them on their visits, and the regulations might be a little altered, 10,268–79.

Other suggested reforms under various heads.

"SALVATION ARMY."

Col. Barker (Salvation Army).—(For 14 years an officer of the Salvation Army; secretary for the social operations of the Army in the Darkest England scheme.)

Work of the Army in Australia in connexion with prisons explained, 8260–82, 8295, 8483. The Prison Gate Home receives convicts and first sentence men; the casual is dealt with at temporary relief works, of which there are five in London. Since the Home was opened in February 1891, 1,197 discharged prisoners have been dealt with; of this number 383 have obtained employment after from one to 18 months (of these 87 per cent. are doing well, 10 per cent. have been lost sight of, 2 per cent. have returned to crime, and then there are the doubtfuls who, although not lost sight of, have not satisfied the authorities that they are reformed); 7 have enlisted in the army, 376 after working well and giving satisfaction, have left to seek work; 128 out of the 1,197 have been discharged as unsatisfactory and unwilling to work, 8310–18, 8385–95; perhaps three-fourths of the whole number are first offenders, 8396–400; of those received a great number are mentally weak and wasted, a considerable number colour blind, 8333–40; of the physically weak the larger proportion would come from the local prisons, the statement as to the feeble-minded applies more to convicts, 8401–29; the figures 1,197 apply to London alone, 8348–49. The various shelters cover 1,000 each day, mostly casuals; 20 per cent., perhaps, find their way to prison, 8352–56. All classes received, drunken and refractory cases not kept at the home, but sent to other departments of the scheme; they would number 264 out of the 1,197, 8364–73. Perhaps 10 a day, or 500 in the year, are received at the prison gate but do not pass into the Home, being sent elsewhere, and staying on an average two months; nothing definite known of their after movements, 8374–82. Women are sent to a home in Mare Street. Mrs. Bramwell

Booth recently reported that she has had 700 women through her homes, 395 of whom have been sentenced for criminal offences, 8383–84. The chief industry is the salvage (the collecting and sorting of waste paper mainly): other industries are tailoring, boot and shoe making, and mat-making, 8306. Men are received who have learnt a trade in prison, but they are few in number, 8319–20; weekly cost per man, 7*s.* Salvage pays for keep and something towards cost of administration. At present a loss is incurred, 8437–41. Salvage work explained, 8442–50. Task work is performed in the lower class of labour yards, and men are paid according to the value of their work; the highest rate of wage 5*s.* a week, in addition to food and lodging, 8448–49. The next step is promotion to be a foreman with, perhaps, 2*s.* or 2*s.* 6*d.* a day, 8451. The Army desires to be placed on an equality with other agencies, 8284, 8293–94. Measures should be taken to prevent unscrupulous prisoners taking advantage of different societies, 8286–92. Co-operation necessary, 8293. A number of agencies, but few prisoners' homes in England, 8292. A notice should be handed to each prisoner before discharge giving the names of societies willing to help; representatives from special societies should be allowed access to the prison on certain week-days in addition to the ordinary visiting committee, 8295. The advantages enjoyed by the Army over other aid societies, better appliances and more agents, 8454–56; more highly organised, 8457. Communication with prisoners prior to discharge very desirable; a great help abroad, 8279–81, 8460–62, 8474. Failing this, prisoners should be allowed to put their names down to be met at the prison gate, and this should be communicated to the Army, 8475. Visiting and conducting service in prisons at Kimberley and Cape Town explained, 8466–73.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Witness's last sentence remitted by Home Secretary on condition that he went to the Salvation Army Home, 8590. Prisoners need a home, not money, on leaving prison. A large number of prisoners would, if they had a chance, go into the Salvation Army Home, 8592–96; and see 8661–64.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Selected officers of the Salvation Army would do far more good with certain classes of criminals than either the Protestant or Roman Catholic chaplains, 11,281–3.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Rescued and started in business by the Salvation Army, 9600, 9605.

Testimony by Chief Justice of Victoria to the good work done by the Rescue Department of the Salvation Army in Melbourne. Appendix V. (p. 571).

SILENT SYSTEM. See "Talking."

SPECIAL CLASS.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Witness does not agree with Colonel Plummer's evidence (see 9013) as to the unsatisfactory working of rules with regard to the "Special Class." An improvement, however, might be effected. What is most important to a prisoner relating to this class is the money gratuity attached to it, and when a man does not in the opinion of the governor merit the special class owing to some little misconduct in the latter part of the sentence (because a special class carries not only a special gratuity of 3*l.*, but a week's extra remission of sentence), then the extra remission should be withheld, to mark the difference between that man and the prisoner whose conduct is really exemplary, 11,730.

Col. Plummer.—Rules with regard to the special class do not work well, 9013.

"ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION."

Mr. William Wheatley.—Accommodation in the four mission homes, 7119; advantages of the homes, 7121; per-centage taking advantage of them, 7155–60; number of incorrigibles, 7162; medically unfit for hard work taken in, 7163–65; period of detention depends on circumstances, 7180, 7194, 7195; comparatively few cases of runaways, 7196, 7197. As to distribution of tickets to prisoners about to be discharged, 7096, 7097, 7102, 7104, 7156; access to prisoners refused by order of the Home Office, 7100, 7101, 7141; in favour of all similar bonâ fide societies having equal advantages, 7106–12, 7153–55; lists obtained from police of prisoners about to be discharged, 7113; no comments on the institution of the Government grant, 7115; interviews boys in prison on remand, 7141–52; difficulty of providing ships for boys who desire to go to sea, 7182–84; difficulty of disposing of boys with physical defects, 7186.

STAFF.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Statement of the various steps taken in fixing the staff of local prisons since their transfer, 10,765; warders bear a certain per-centage to officers, but allowances are made for the special circumstances of particular prisons; so too with medical staff, 10,776–83; female prisoners probably require more individual treatment than the men, and therefore larger staff, 10,766, 10,767; sleeping in to answer bells is not reckoned as night duty either for male or female officers, 10,768–71. No reason to suppose medical staff is not up to the mark for dealing with mental cases, 10,772.

Miss E. Little.—Staff at Strangeways insufficient, 5099–5114.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Convict prisons under-manned, 9360.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Considers numbers and present proportion of staff generally sufficient, 10,108–14, 10,139–41, 10,352–55; and that assistant warders as a class are not more discontented than all large bodies of public servants, 10,127–31; a contented staff of great importance, 10,132; temporary officers still, but to a reduced extent, employed; does not think this results in trafficking, 10,133–38, 10,309; apparent discrepancy between staff shown on estimate and actual staff a source of discontent, 10,374–84; would, as in Scotland, take clerical from disciplinary staff by promotion and then let the clerical staff be eligible for promotion in the prison service generally, 10,346–48.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—Staff at Birmingham adequate even to secure Sunday exercise, 2704–11.

Dr. Walker.—As to discrepancy between actual number of officers and that shown on estimates, 3844–52; has noticed no effects of over-work on women warders, 3923–27; but infirmary staff too small, 3939–41; and general staff not sufficient to allow of exercise in the afternoon as well as in the morning, and Sunday exercise, 3952–56.

SUICIDE.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Four cases at Portsmouth, attributed to severity of punishment, 9660–61, 9726–38. See Appendix IX. (p. 617) for reply of Prisons Board.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—Statistics as to suicide; about 8 per annum in local prisons for last six years, tendency greater in local than in convict prisons, and early in sentence rather than later, 1199–1203, 1368–75.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—As to suicide and insanity in prisons, tendency greater inside than outside prison, greater on first reception than afterwards, greater with prisoners under remand than convicted, greater with first offenders than habituals, 2998–3006, 3580–82. Prison population specially affected by congenital infirmities, but this insufficient to account for large proportion of insanity and suicides, which last has recently been reduced by mechanical means, transmuting the tendency to suicide into insanity, 2999, 3007–10, 3613–17.

Dr. David Nicolson.—Three cases of suicide at Broadmoor in 18 years, but attempts are not at all infrequent, 9357–9.

Number of persons tried for attempting to commit suicide in each period of five years from 1874 to 1893. Appendix III. (p. 540).

TALKING.

Dr. Brayn.—At Woking silence is enforced on those in separate confinement, others have one hour's talking in groups of two or three every day; talking also allowed in laundry and twine shop about the work, 4886–88, 4949, 5022–29, 5835; and among the old women, 4917; this is different from male convict prisons, 4937.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Conversation should be allowed as a reward for good behaviour when the third class is reached after 12 months' penal servitude; hardened offenders, however, to be kept apart; 11,226–34, 11,319–21. Organised systems of communication exist, but these subterfuges would in a great measure cease if present rules were relaxed, 11,268–9. Prohibition of speech absolutely indefensible; a fruitful source of offence against prison rules, and an encouragement to deceit and cunning, helping to keep in activity practices and faculties peculiar to the criminal class, 11,318.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Rules as to speaking too harsh; convicts should be allowed to converse at recreation on Sundays, 9656–58; talking without punishment due to lenient officer, 9764.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Thinks it would be a dangerous system to allow convicts to talk to one another; there are great difficulties in devising a classification reliable enough to render conversations among convicts innocuous; the silence at present is not absolute, men talk about their work, 10,479–99. Very large number of punishments for talking, but the rule against it is salutary, 10,706–709, 10,751–54.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Not afraid of prisoners talking to one another; danger in too strict a rule of silence, 2972, 2973, 3643–55, especially in convict prisons, 2973–76; of which, however, witness has not had much personal experience, 3426–42; association with conversation, though undesirable in local prisons, not in the same measure objectionable in convict prisons where not all are habitual offenders, 3346–60. Sitting close together in chapel a temptation to talk, which might be obviated by sending half the prisoners to chapel one day, and half the next, 2977–83, 3096.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Does not think silent system, as carried on in convict prisons, works badly, 10,052–59, 10,086–10,087; as to changes consequent upon the report of the Kimberley Commission, 10,192–203.

TICKET-OF-LEAVE.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—The ticket-of-leave should be reserved for old offenders; it operates against the first offender to have to report to the police, and this class should work out a short sentence instead; very strong grounds for complaints against detectives; has in conversation with prisoners who have returned after a first conviction heard frequent complaints as to not being allowed a fair chance on discharge, 11,314–5; even in the case of a third or fourth term prisoner would give governor, chaplain, and doctor power to recommend discharge without ticket given real evidence of reformation, 11,369, see also 11,374; objection to ticket-of-leave system would fall through if regulations, which are admirable, were carried out, but they are not, 11,371–3.

See also "Police Supervision."

TRADES UNIONS AND PRISON INDUSTRIES.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Development of prison labour would not interfere with the free industry; the views of certain trade unionists are very narrow; competition in the mat-making industry would be infinitesimal as compared with foreign labour, 11,242–7.

Mr. J. J. Rudge (General Secretary of the National Flint Glass Makers' Trade Union).—Agrees that so far as the outside markets are concerned the result of prison labour has been very much exaggerated, 11,045; and that the estimated value of prison labour (120,000*l.*) is an almost infinitesimal proportion of the labour of the country, 11,046–50. The mat-making industry is seriously affected to-day by foreign prison labour, 11,057; in fact is suffering more seriously from competition to-day than a few years back, 11,059. Trades unions could not complain if regulations were framed for putting the products of prison labour on the market at a fair market price, 11,060–63. Agrees that articles supplied by the prisons to Government departments are probably of a special character, demands for which constitute a special class of work; and that prison labour in this direction would not come into competition in the sense that it might in the mat-making industry, 11,065–7; also as to the necessity for employing prisoners productively, but the Government should not become manufacturers on too extensive a scale, 11,082–90; knows of no industry other than mat-making which specially interferes with outside labour, 11,102.

Mr. J. H. Walker (Corresponding Secretary of the Manchester District Flint Glass Makers' Union).—Concurs.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR PRISON OFFICERS.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Proposal to have training prisons for warders attractive, but there are difficulties, e.g., the expense of moving the warders up to and down from their probationary stage, especially where you are dealing with married men, 10,797–801.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Would make two or three large prisons training schools for warders, 6460–2. Same plan would work well for deputy-governors; it did obtain, so long as Millbank existed, 6463–6.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Strongly in favour of warders, and, perhaps, deputy-governors, being trained at two or three specially selected prisons, 7467–71.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Warders before being appointed should pass through a period of probation, during which they should be regularly trained at certain prisons set apart for the purpose, 11,417–9.

Mr. Tallack.—Strongly in favour of certain prisons being used as training schools, 6899.

Mr. E. Taylor.—Favours suggestion that one or two of the smaller prisons be used as training schools for warders, 9463.

TRANSFER OF PRISONS. See under "Prison Act, 1877."

UNCONVICTED PRISONERS.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Diet of remand and unconvicted prisoners very poor, 8606–7.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Unconvicted prisoners were harshly treated, being placed in punishment cells, denied access to newspapers and visits from friends, except in the presence of prison officials; diet being the ordinary prison diet and insufficient in quantity unless prisoner provided his own food; had two days' experience of prison diet at Newgate, but could not eat it; then prisoners were roughly handled by the police when taken from the cells to the court, 11,188–93; no evils to be feared from visits without supervision, reasonable precautions being taken against admitting unsuitable visitors, 11,270–6.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Is satisfied with unconvicted prisoners' treatment as to diet; the diet is not a penal one, the food is adequate, and it may be modified to any reasonable extent by the prisoner's own action, 10,856–70.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Diet of unconvicted prisoners unsatisfactory, 7496–511.

Major J. Knox.—Diet very meagre, 8017–8.

Lieut.-Col. E. S. Milman.—Satisfied on the whole with treatment of remand and unconvicted prisoners; they get a newspaper, but prison diet and accommodation, unless they pay for better food and accommodation, and the injustice of the distinction between rich and poor thus set up is more apparent than real, 6778–88.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Considers present treatment of unconvicted prisoners, as to food, &c., as fair, broadly speaking, as can be devised, 10,503–17.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—As to unconvicted prisoners, admits that those who have money and can buy better food than the best prison dietary have to that extent an unfair advantage over poorer men, 10,402–11.

VISITING COMMITTEES.

Dr. Ancrum.—Duties of visiting body in the past and at the present time compared, 9193–96; interest taken in work greatly diminished owing to present system, 9201–2. Old system of visiting justices led to improvements in prison management, 9208. Means by which the interest of the visiting justices might be restored, 9210–18. Reformatory influence of prisons lessened by lack of interest on part of visiting committees, 9216–17.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—It is inconsistent with the position of visiting committees under the Act that they should take part in the management of the prisons, make contracts for supplies, &c., but they have really almost as much power as they had if they care to use it; they are independent judges to whom any prisoner may complain, and the whole life of the prison is open to their criticism, 10,871–4.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—In favour of encouraging visiting justices, much of whose work is similar to that of inspectors; section 14 of the Act of 1877 gives them great powers if they would only use them; good might be done by giving them more direct responsibility, e.g., recommending candidates for prison offices, though final appointment should rest with central authority, 6406–13, 6744; at present the visiting justices, as indeed governors, are not informed of the visits of inspectors and commissioners, 6517–9; admits that the present powers of the visiting committee are mainly judicial rather than administrative, but they have a free hand to criticise, 6558–69, 6745–7. Cannot admit that the visiting committees could replace the inspectors altogether, 6748–55. Home Office letter to the Strangeways Visiting Committee in 1879 (the purport of which was communicated to other visiting committees) did not result in any marked increase of zeal in the performance of the duties imposed on the committees and individual justices by the Act of 1877, 11,651–9. Visiting Justices have no power to relax regulations as regards letters, but can extend the duration of a visit, 11,681.

Major Knox.—Visiting Justices' powers with regard to matters of prison discipline should be increased, 7871–74; they take no interest in the work of the prison at Leeds, never visiting except on quarter day, although asked to come oftener. At Gloucester they visited every other week, 8032–36, 8175–87. Does not favour the suggestion of a Ladies' Aid Committee to deal with the women's side of the prison, the female agent of the Aid Society is sufficient, 8037–39; justices' duties, 8060–66.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Attaches much importance to any means that can be devised for bringing outside feeling to bear upon the work of the Prison Commissioners; the best means now available for this purpose seem to be the visiting committees; they should, however, have little or nothing to do with the everyday affairs and arrangements of the prison; is quite opposed to a dual administration; their true and important function, in addition to hearing complaints in the prison, is in their annual report to review prison administration in its larger features, and to submit general observations and suggestions; this they occasionally do now, but not nearly so often as might be desired; a recent improvement effected by this means is the discontinuance of the small iron cells at Dartmoor; again, the question of useless labour has been referred to this committee owing to the remonstrances of the Bristol visiting committee; visiting justices and justices in sessions assembled have, to a great extent, tolerated useless labour for years, and bad cells too, 11,399–403; a circular should be issued to the visiting committees every year by the Secretary of State (at the beginning of the year, perhaps, rather than at the end, or there might be two circulars), specifying the principal features of prison administration upon which he requests full observations and suggestions; the reports with an analysis to be laid before Parliament, 11,404–7.

Mr. R. S. Mitford.—Would give visiting committees certain powers to grant extra visits, &c. to prisoners, but not to appoint warders, though their recommendation is always received gladly, 10,633–46.

Mr. J. H. Stone (Chairman of Visiting Committee at Birmingham).—Visiting committee visits in batches of two once a fortnight, 2684, 2685. Has only hearsay knowledge of working of system prior to transfer to Government, 2607; though not taking so strong a view as his predecessor, Mr. Manton, still, speaking as regards Birmingham, disappointed with results of Act of 1877, 2608–11; saving to Birmingham has been small, 2612. As to communications with prisoners, thinks governor and visiting committee should have power to relax regulations, 2622; would give visiting committee power to punish prison offences by extending term of imprisonment, 2630–38.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Visiting committees report direct to the Home Secretary, and have little contact with the Commissioners, 466–77.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Would not allow further powers in prison administration to visiting justices, 9377–79; but cannot endorse complaints of lack of interest, 9380–82; justices visit York once a month regularly, or at least 12 times a year, and examine and sign all books and journals; their powers and duties very similar to those of inspectors, 9546–52.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Would be glad if visiting justices had some share in administration, better locus standi for recommendations, and a qualified power of appointment of officers, 2227–48.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Attendance unsatisfactory at Swansea, 9838–41, 9937–46; against philanthropic visits to prisoners, good justices sufficient, 9953–60; the most useful and only independent outside body; should be granted increased responsibility to enhance interest in their work, 9947–52.

See letter from Admiral Tinklar, Governor of Birmingham Prison. Appendix IX. (p. 610).

VISITS AND COMMUNICATIONS.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Discretionary powers are better vested in the visiting committee, 6490–5. Prison Commissioners have recently issued a Standing Order, No. 228 (see Appendix V.) giving governors increased powers as to extra letters and visits, 11,681–4. Cannot agree with Captain Johnson that a prisoner having earned a visit should have that visit whether he be under punishment or not. Explains present practice, 11,727–9, and see 11,762–4.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—Recent arrangements suffice. Uses his discretion as to extension of existing privileges in cases of emergency, without consulting Home Office, but does not advocate general adoption of this course; visiting committee might decide in such cases. The "three months" rule a deterrent, and should be preserved, 4063–70.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Some further discretion should be given to Governors. If a visit is due prisoner should not be prevented from having it by a subsequent offence, 8770–2, 8903–4.

Miss E. Little.—Visits to prisoners under sentence not so frequent, as, according to regulations, they might be, 5172; letter-writing looked forward to, would be glad of an extension of this privilege, 5174–5.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—Does not advocate a freer system, 743–48, 949–59, 1046.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Would give governors discretionary power to allow more frequent intercourse between prisoners and reputable friends likely to do them good, 1532–38; but not too much to be expected from visits of philanthropic persons from outside, 1727–30.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—As to communications with prisoners, regulations should be left as they are, so far as affects old offenders, save that children should not be allowed to visit them except under exceptional circumstances, e.g., death in a family, 3033, 3036–38. Interviews should be allowed between husband and wife without humiliating barriers in case of first offenders, at governor's discretion, 3034, 3035. As regards juveniles, even up to age of 21, three months' rule should be relaxed in favour of parents, 3039, 3040. So too with first offenders, though what a "first offender" is is hard to know, 3041.

Col. Plummer.—Would give the governor greater discretionary power as to visits, 9000–1.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—As to letters, a relaxation in vogue at Wandsworth is to send in prisoners' behalf form "L. P. C. 3"; this, in place of governor writing for prisoner, which is infrequent, 2560–64. Would give a larger discretionary power to governors to allow special letters, 2565–67. No necessity for same relaxation with regard to visits, 2568–69.

Mr. M. J. Walker.—Present system operates well, but governors should have greater discretionary power, 1834–43.

Standing Order 213, regulating letters and visits of local prisoners; and summary of regulations governing visits to, and communications with, local and convict prisoners. Appendix V. (pp. 568–9).

Standing Order 228, of 8th February 1895, modifying previous regulations as to the letters of local prisoners. Appendix V. (p. 570).

WARDERS.

(1.) Male.

Mr. D—— (ex-prisoner).—Witness's experience is that they are as a whole well-selected men, 8541–43, 8636–40.

Mr. Michael Davitt.—Special cases of harshness towards prisoners at Dartmoor, 11,203, 11,326–7; strong disinclination amongst prisoners to report these cases, warders having power to refuse marks, and thus prolong sentence, 11,204–6, 11,339–40; cases reported do not furnish a fair standard of the amount of ill-treatment on the part of warders, 11,341; harsh treatment of prisoners explained if training of warders, mostly old soldiers and sailors who have undergone severe discipline, is taken into account; at Dartmoor certain officers were recruited from the agricultural class, and a few were artisans, they appeared to be more considerate and humane, 11,207, 11,380; a better class of men should be induced, by increase of pay and reduction of hours of labour, to enter the service, 11,210, 11,342; hours excessively long; strongly urges the application of the eight hours' rule to warders, 11,343–4.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Proposal to have training prisons for warders attractive, but there are difficulties, e.g., the expense of moving the warders up to and down from their probationary stage, especially where you are dealing with married men, 10,797–801.

Mr. E—— (ex-convict).—Individual officers prejudiced against individual prisoners, 9724, 9725; ill-treatment of prisoners by warders at Portsmouth and Woking, 9650–53; some warders little-minded and uneducated, 9649; warders killed by convicts, 9653–5.

WARDERS—cont.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Would make two or three large prisons training schools for warders, 6460–2. Same plan would work well for deputy-governors; it did obtain, so long as Millbank existed, 6463–6. Practice of employing temporary officers virtually at an end, as regards male staff, save in very exceptional cases, 6467. Male staff generally is adequate, 6468, 6471; Holloway staff in particular is adequate, 6719–23. And their hours (the subject of Lord De Ramsay's recent committee) reasonable, 6607–9. Female staff requires looking into, 6469. Admits a block of promotion generally, but not that it is due to the closing of prisons, most of those closed being small, and promotion having now a wider scope than formerly, 6702–12. As to apparent discrepancy between actual staff and staff estimated for, 6470. Trafficking between warders and prisoners' friends does exist, but not to any great extent, 6472–3. On the whole satisfied with the class of men got as warders, 6474. And their hours are fair, 6475–7.

Dr. R. M. Gover.—Warders' work not so depressing as to be productive of insanity, 1464–1466. Their hours reasonable, 1467–70.

Mr. Charles Hall.—Warders not so good now as under county management, 4644–46; more care was exercised in selection, 4736–40.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Warders at Strangeways capable of training prisoners for productive labour, 7422–23. Favours the introduction of a greater number of skilled workmen, with special remuneration, 7432–33. Speaking generally, the warders are adequate for their duties, 7446; but harshness towards prisoners a general failure, resulting sometimes in the latter being unjustly punished by visiting committee; Strangeways is improving in this respect, 7612–39. A great deal depends on the governor, and the reforming influence exercised by him, 7741–50, 7765–71. Pay and hours satisfactory, 7447–48. Hours, night duty, &c., explained, 7449–62, 7673–79, 7551–57. Strongly in favour of warders, and, perhaps, deputy-governors, being trained at two or three specially selected prisons, 7467–71. A warder acts as schoolmaster; his duties and hours explained, 7680–92, 7734–35.

Capt. F. Johnson.—Is satisfied with the class of men as a whole. Cases of ill-treatment of prisoners very rare. They have not complained recently of their hours of labour, but might be allowed to come in at six instead of shortly after five, 8776–84.

Major James Knox.—Warders, as a rule, a very good class of men, 7960–61. Hours not too long; no complaint on this ground, 7963–64; but staff insufficient, 8126–28; temporary officer constantly employed at Leeds for the last two years, 8199–8209. Witness's experience of Gloucester is that it too was understaffed, 8188–98. Night duty is performed once a week, which means an addition to the ordinary 10 hours a day; when a warder has been kept up by special circumstances for two or three hours, witness has taken upon himself the responsibility of allowing that man two hours at another time. Warders' duties explained, 7965–77. Hours and duties on the female side, 8084–93. A warder acts as schoolmaster, and his hours are longer than if he were a schoolmaster only, 8134–40.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—On the whole, prefers military men for warders and prison officers generally; no danger of "militaryism" in the service; no bias is shown in favour of either a soldier or a civilian as warder; the latter, especially if he knows a trade, is very welcome, 798–802, 1129–33, 1164–68; since the transfer of local prisons to Government, a sounder system of appointment has been instituted, 802, 803; warders' hours not too long, 804–806.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—Character of warders of great importance, and generally speaking the more educated the warder the better; has no bias in favour either of military or of civilian warders, 1764–66; hours of warders rather long, 1767–70; but their work generally very well done, 1731–36.

Dr. David Nicolson.—At Broadmoor the labouring man or artisan preferred to the military man, 9353–56. Convict prisons undermanned, 9360.

Col. Plummer.—Their hours not now too long, but promotion hopelessly slow; advocates scheme which would allow warders to retire after 26 years' service, 9008–10.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Thinks on the whole that soldiers provide better warders than civilians, 2601; warders' hours are too long and the subject of complaint, 2602, 2603.

Mr. J. H. Stone.—In favour of better classification of warders, abolishing class of assistant warders, 2662; hours and holidays of warders very fair, 2663.

Capt. W. J. Stopford.—Conduct of prisoners influenced by warders in charge of them, 255–57; no difference between warders who have served in the Army and Navy and civilians, 258–59; comparison of duties of warders and those of London Police, 265–67; not much dissatisfaction in the service, 268; though otherwise adequate, staff not sufficient to admit of Sunday exercise, 687–94; probation of warders, 270–77; appointment of warders, 503–4; vacancies not advertised, 278; limits of age for male warders, 279–83; pressure of work admittedly greater in some prisons than others, but no provision for shorter hours in specially difficult prisons, e.g., Holloway, 521–27; outside assistance for disciplinary purposes, 286–88; libraries for warders in all prisons, reading and recreation rooms in large prisons, 269.

Mr. Tallack.—Advocates the improvement of warders by means of instruction and periodical meetings, 6898, 6955–58; prisons as training schools for warders, and as a reserve staff, 6899; better pay and prospects of promotion, 6900; considers that warders show harshness in some cases, 6918–20; proposes extension of the powers of visiting justices to the selection and management of warders, 6931–38; considers that the majority of large prisons are under-officered, 6939–42; points out improvements which should be made in the condition of subordinate officials, 6944–54; prefers the civilian warder, 6955–58.

Mr. Edwin Taylor.—Warders on appointment should not be over 30 years of age; prefers civilian warders; favours suggestion that one or two of the smaller prisons be used as training schools for warders; one or two cases of harsh officers, but generally a satisfactory body of men; improvement since transfer, 9456–68; a good class of officers at Knutsford, 9501–9503; discipline of warders most unsatisfactory at York on his appointment; not properly trained; governor should not leave their training altogether to chief warder, 9489–9508; warders under witness when in charge of convicts, content with pay and hours, 9515; take their tone very much from governor, 9531.

Capt. H. K. Wilson.—Assistant warders discontented with prospects, the class should be abolished and warders commence at 60*l.*, rising to the maximum of that class, 9906–7; education of men passed by Civil Service Commissioners most defective, 9925. Warders take their tone very much from governor; no case of dismissal of warder on complaint of prisoner, but has reprimanded officer for harsh language, 9889–92; when warders report against prisoner, has heard every witness brought before him, 9898.

(2.) Female.

Miss M. J. Bell.—At Holloway, warders, three days out of four, are on duty from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.; on the fourth day, from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. (rarely later), with a break of 1¼ hours at 4 p.m.; warder on late duty afterwards sleeps in prison, and is liable to be rung up by prisoners; all the warders, excepting one in each wing, being in their quarters; the strain on officers is great, though sick warders more often suffer from colds than overwork; hours of duty should be shorter 5393–5407.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—Female staff requires looking into, 6469; is at times in excess of requirements so far as work to be performed is concerned. Dorchester, with an average of six female prisoners, would have at least two officers; and Oxford, with three prisoners, has two warders, the permanent staff: but a second officer is necessary for purpose of relief. Female prisoners have been drafted to other prisons to a certain extent, but this course meets with local opposition, 11,659–65.

Miss J. T. Gee.—At Liverpool prisoners are received up to 8 p.m.; two reception warders are told off to wait for the van and are relieved of late duty on that account, 5830–3; two warders sleep in guard-room and answer bells; the strain is great, but warders are not over-worked, 5870–6; do not complain of over-work; hours of duty 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. except on two days in the week when they are on duty till 10; on these days they have two hours' relief in the afternoon (40 minutes for breakfast, 70 minutes for dinner and tea respectively), 5824–9.

Capt. C. W. Hill.—Number of officers on women's side at Strangeways insufficient, 7463–65.

Miss E. Little.—Staff at Strangeways insufficient. Is allowed six weeks' leave, but, being short-handed, generally takes three; responsibility rests with chief warder in matron's absence; the introduction of temporary warders in time of pressure not good for discipline of prison; warders' hours respected as much as possible, but while on duty they have to work very hard, 5099–5114; warders all reside in prison and mess together; an officer should be appointed to cook for them, at present a prisoner acts as cook, 5299, 5338–44.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Female officers, hours at Wormwood Scrubs not too long, except that the duty of answering the bell at night should count entirely as night duty, the officer on this duty to sit up instead of retiring, but the occupation monotonous and depressing, 6227–33.

WEAK-MINDED PRISONERS.

Col. Barker (Salvation Army).—A great number of the discharged prisoners received at the Salvation Army Home are mentally weak and wasted, a considerable number colour blind, 8333–40; of the physically weak the larger proportion would come from the local prisons; statement as to the feeble-minded applies more to convicts, 8401–29.

Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E.—Epileptic and weak-minded criminals might be concentrated under a specialist, if numerous enough, and the best way to deal with all whose weak-mindedness leads them into crime would be to keep them permanently under control, a step for which public opinion is not prepared, 10,773–75, 10,923, 10,951.

Dr. Bevan Lewis.—Treatment of prisoners under observation in prison calculated, so far as solitary confinement is concerned, to prejudice their mental condition, 9101–5. The mentally-enfeebled class should be segregated entirely apart from the criminal class; outdoor employment an all-important factor in their treatment, 9107–9; to concentrate in particular prisons for special observation the weak-minded and neurotic prisoners would be a most progressive movement, and one of vital importance, 9126; is inclined to think that there is a heavy per-centage of such cases, and that it would be found necessary to multiply such institutions if the question were once taken up, 9127.

Miss E. Little.—Few feeble-minded prisoners at Strangeways, 5279–80.

Mr. J. B. Manning.—The weak-minded (but not insane), kept as a class apart, and placed in hospital association room if isolation bad for them, 1031–37; out-door agricultural work would be most valuable, especially for juveniles and the weak-minded, 1045.

Rev. G. P. Merrick.—A number of weak-minded prisoners, who are not however fit subjects for an asylum, 1703–11; these are generally undergrown, 1712–14; such cases are kept under medical officer's observation and have light work, e.g., needlework, in separate cells unless for medical reasons placed in association, 1715–19.

Dr. David Nicolson.—For half-witted criminals, some kind of intermediate institution advocated, where they could be kept firmly under detention, but not definitely classed as lunatics. As to employment, out-door labour advocated, 9302–6. Such an institution ought to be worked at about half the cost of Broadmoor. This class probably amounts to from 2 to 3 per cent. of the prison population, and a building to accommodate 200 or 300 would meet all requirements, 9311–17.

Mr. E. J. Ruggles-Brise.—Many recidivists are weak-minded, 10,232–38; in weak-minded cases separate confinement should be modified, 10,923–41.

Dr. T. C. Shaw.—The class commonly called weak-minded should be seen medically every day, but it is on admission that there should be an exceedingly close medical inspection, and this is an immense undertaking, 6026, 6062–5; the proper way of dealing with this class is to keep them in an institution on the principle of Broadmoor, 6074–8. As to employment of persons in unstable or neurotic state, that in the open air and on the land is much the best, 6027*a*, 6028.

Number of prisoners classed as feeble-minded on 15th February 1895. Appendix III. (p. 531).

WORKSHOPS.

Mr. Charles Hall.—Workshop at Lewes formerly used by 50 mat-makers an excellent arrangement, 4585, 4586; work in cells does not give same opportunity of learning, 4673, 4674, 4680–82, and is sometimes dusty, &c., 4675; association at work when under proper supervision does not lead to bad results, 4590–95.

Capt. Helby, R.N.—No need for any great extension of workshops at Wandsworth; system of associated labour works well, 4101–10.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Strongly in favour of extending associated labour, which has beneficial effect on prisoners; provision at present insufficient, 2966–71, 3147–50, 3361–65.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—Would be glad to add to appliances for industrial training, particularly in association after the first month's imprisonment, 3146–50, 3212; this would necessitate increase in staff, 3202–6; benefits of associated labour outweigh the danger of talking, which is greatest in chapel, 3151–54.

WORMWOOD SCRUBS OUTBREAK, 1891.

Col. M. C. Garsia.—States that there were not two outbreaks, the outbreak which occurred has been greatly exaggerated, it was not due to cruel treatment of the prisoners; an officer went in command of the prison with but three months' experience of prison service, discipline was relaxed, and the prisoners got out of hand; the real origin of the disturbance was relaxed discipline, and the grievances of certain convicts, who were discontented with their treatment in a local prison, 6444–6, 6594–6606; case of local prisoner J. E. had nothing whatever to do with the outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs, which was confined to convicts, 6446–8, 6453, 6698–6701; nor was the outbreak due to young officers, for those in charge of the convicts were selected officers, 6453.

Sir Godfrey Lushington, K.C.B.—Outbreak explained. No recurrence of trouble either at that prison or elsewhere, 11,552–5.

Rev. W. D. Morrison.—Outbreak at Wormwood Scrubs arose from indiscreet handling of prison, e.g., in inflicting undue punishment, 3078–84; see case of prisoner J. E——, 3805–95, 3443–63, 3532–34.

Dr. T. D. Patmore.—Wormwood Scrubs outbreak not due to undue severity, but rather to want of proper firmness on part of the Governor, 6301–12. Discipline improved by firm and judicious management, 6376–86.

Capt. E. Schuyler.—His experience at Wormwood Scrubs in connexion with the outbreak there, 3261–73.

Particulars of all convicts reported in connexion with this disturbance; and offences and punishments of convicts during eight days prior thereto. Appendix VI. (p. 574).

SEVENTEENTH REPORT

OF THE

GENERAL PRISONS BOARD, IRELAND.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY GEORGE HENRY,
EARL CADOGAN, K.G.,

LORD LIEUTENANT GENERAL AND GENERAL GOVERNOR OF IRELAND

General Prisons Board,
Dublin Castle,
August, 1895.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

1. We have the honour, pursuant to statute, to present this our Seventeenth Annual Report on the condition of the prisons and prisoners within our jurisdiction, and with respect to the registration of criminals for the year ended 31st March, 1895.

I.—LOCAL PRISONS.

Committals.

2. We are happy to state that the gradual reduction in the total number of committals to local prisons still continues.

3. The following Table shows the number of committals to local prisons in the years mentioned since 1854 :—

COMMITMENTS, &c., exclusive of Committals under Civil Process.

Conduct of Prisoners.

4. The conduct of the prisoners has been satisfactory. The total number of prison offences in 1893–4 was 9,110, as compared with 7,409 for this year, showing a diminution of 1,701, while the number of prisoners punished during the same period has decreased from 4,549 to 3,997.

The following return gives the particulars and percentages of prisoners punished for the last five years :—

Year.	No. of Prison Offences.	No. of Prisoners punished.	Percentage of Prisoners punished to total number of Prisoners.
1890-1, . . .	11,182	5,463	12·6
1891-2, . . .	10,930	5,168	12·9
1892-3, . . .	10,893	5,226	14·1
1893-4, . . .	9,110	4,549	12·3
1894-5, . . .	7,409	3,997	11·7

Short sentences.

5. From Table VI. it will be seen that of the 29,042 commitments on conviction, 12,895, or 44 per cent., were for terms not exceeding a week; 18,283, or 63 per cent., for terms not exceeding a fortnight; and 24,049, or 82 per cent., for terms not exceeding a month. In our previous reports we have frequently called attention to the inutility of imposing short sentences on old offenders, but so far as we can judge this practice has not in any degree abated. This is especially noticeable in the case of drunkards, a class that comprises at least 50 per cent. of the convicted prisoners in this country.

Drunkards.

6. From a curative point of view this system has admittedly proved a failure, while from a disciplinary point of view grave objection must be taken to sending habitual drunkards to prison where, owing to their condition of health, they have in most cases to be treated as patients rather than as prisoners.

We think it ought to be a question for consideration whether the law on this subject should not be amended, so that such inebriates, instead of being committed to prison for short terms, should be detained and treated for lengthened periods in special institutions to be established for this purpose.

Juveniles.

7. From the following table it will be seen that a large diminution has taken place of late years in the number of convicted juvenile prisoners.

RETURN of Convicted Juveniles committed in following years.

Years.	Under 12 Years of age		12 to 16 Years o fage.		Total.

1894-95, .	25	3	218	56	243	59	302

8. We note with much satisfaction this decrease, and earnestly hope that it may continue. In our opinion the cases are rare indeed where the nature of the offence would justify the imprisonment of these juvenile offenders, or where good results are likely to be thus secured. We think that where these culprits are deemed suitable for a Reformatory, they should as a rule be sent there direct from Court without the infliction of a term of imprisonment.

9. The following table gives the particulars of the 28 cases where convicted juveniles under 12 years of age were imprisoned during the year 1894-5.

Prison mortality.

10. It is again our duty to report a very low rate of mortality. While the average daily number of prisoners in the local prisons during the year was 2,323, the number of deaths, excluding 2 executions, was 6; representing a death rate of 2·58 per thousand on the daily average number in custody.

11. Subjoined is a table of mortality among prisoners for each year during the last sixteen years :—

YEAR.	Daily Average Number of Prisoners.	No. of Deaths.	Rate per Thousand	YEAR.	Daily Average Number of Prisoners.	No. of Deaths.	Rate per Thousand.
1879–80,	2,812	23	8·18	1887–8,	2,566	13	5·07
1880–1,	2,620	14	5·34	1888–9,	2,648	6	2·27

1886–7,	2,643	9	3·40	1894–5,	2,323	6	2·58

12. The causes of the six deaths were heart disease in two cases, dysentery, puerperal fever, asthma, and delirium tremens. The last mentioned case resulted fatally in a prisoner of broken down constitution four days after committal. Of the remaining five cases three were persons in delicate health when admitted.

13. There was one case of typhoid fever, but none of typhus. Special precautions were taken in the Dublin prisons in reference to small-pox, which has been rife in that city, and which first broke out in the immediate neighbourhood of Grangegorman prison. Happily the prisons have so far escaped. There has been exceedingly little zymotic disease, and the general state of health has been good. Fifty-four have been released on medical grounds, a decrease of six as compared with last year. Of the 54, there were 31 women who were near their confinement, and of the remaining 23, there were 15 cases of disease, which were reported as having originated before reception. Health of prisoners.

14. The number of prisoners transferred as insane to asylums was 72, a decrease of 21 from last year's return. Of the 72 there was 1 who was sane while in prison, but who was found to have been insane at the time he committed the offence; of the remaining 71 only 7 became insane after admission. Insanity.

In the previous year the result was much the same. Out of 93 cases transferred to asylums only 8 developed insanity while in prison, with a daily average of 2,436.

Again, during the twelve months ending 31st March, 1893, out of 92 prisoners transferred to asylums 12 became insane in prison, but 4 of these had been previously in asylums. It will thus be seen that cases of insanity originating or developing in prison are exceedingly few, having regard to the fact that so many offenders are the victims of habitual intemperance with its resulting mental instability.

15. From the annexed return it will be seen that the Visiting Committees have generally discharged their duties with regularity. Visiting Justices.

* In addition to this number there were 345 convicts under detention in the county prisons, and several hundreds in Bermuda and Gibraltar, who were subsequently discharged in Ireland.

21. The conduct of the Convicts has been generally good. There was no case of corporal punishment.

The following return gives the particulars and percentages of Convicts punished for the last five years :—

Health of Convicts.

22. In the convict prisons there were only two deaths ; one of these was caused by apoplexy, the other by disease of the kidneys which had originated before reception.

There were no cases of either typhus or typhoid fever.

Six were released on medical grounds, and eight were transferred to the Criminal Lunatic Asylum.

III.—GENERAL.

23. We have to report that the convict and local prison premises are in good repair, and that their sanitary condition is satisfactory.

Employment of Prisoners.

24. Convicts of the advanced class have been principally employed at building work at Mountjoy, Maryborough, and Cork Prisons during the year. At the former prison the 23 warders' cottages referred to in last year's report as in course of construction, have been nearly completed, and will, it is anticipated, be soon ready for occupation. At Cork the works of reconstruction have been proceeded with.

25. In Tables XXII. and XXXVII. of the Appendix will be found the particulars of the industrial labour carried on in the local and convict prisons. The net profit on such labour was £3,539 15*s.* 2*d.*, which, notwithstanding the reduction in the number of commitments, shows an increase of £213 17*s.* 10*d.*, as compared with the profits under this head in 1893–4.

26. It has been the aim of the Board to employ all prisoners as far as possible at useful and remunerative labour, and in this respect they have been so far successful that for some years past all absolutely non-productive labour, such as treadmill, cranks, shot-drill, &c., has ceased to be carried on in any of the Irish Prisons.

Considering that the large majority of local prisoners are unskilled labourers, and that they are committed for short terms, (over 82 per cent. of the convicted prisoners being sentenced for terms of imprisonment not exceeding one month, while not 5 per cent. are sentenced to terms of imprisonment exceeding 3 months), it is evident that but little can be done in teaching such prisoners industries that will be useful to them afterwards.

The chief employments, other than prison fatigues, on which unskilled prisoners have been engaged, are stone-breaking, cutting timber for firewood, and oakum picking. The two former industries are fairly remunerative, but the latter, which is not a remunerative one, is being reduced as much as possible, and, whenever it is practicable to do so, matmaking is being substituted in its place.

It is a matter of regret that there is not more land attached to the majority of our prisons, both local and convict, as much useful work could be accomplished in employing more prisoners in gardening and other agricultural work, and so teaching them a better knowledge of what must always be Ireland's chief industry. Employment of this sort is remunerative, and has an improving tendency both physically and morally.

27. But one additional Prisoners' Aid Society—"The Belfast Protestant Prison Gate Mission for Men"—has been certified during the last year. Prisoners' Aid Societies.

At present only the following certified Prisoners' Aid Societies exist in Ireland:—

DUBLIN:

Roman Catholic Female Prisoners' Aid Society.
Roman Catholic Male Prisoners' Aid Society.
Society for the Relief of Poor Protestants (Male and Female) discharged from Prison.

BELFAST:

Prison Gate Mission for Women (Protestant).
Prison Gate Mission for Men (Protestant).

Excellent work is being accomplished by these Societies, but we regret to state, that owing to the absence of similar societies in all the other places where there are prisons, many discharged prisoners who could have been materially assisted in their endeavours to obtain an honest livelihood, have relapsed into crime.

28. We gladly bear witness to the zealous labours in many places of the nuns, and other lady visitors, for the reformation of prisoners, but we consider that their efforts would be far more successful if Prisoners' Aid Societies were established in these localities.

IV.—REGISTRATION OF CRIMINALS.

29. There has been an increase of 55 in the number of Habitual Criminals registered this year as compared with 1893-94.

30. In our last report reference was made to the recommendation of the English Departmental Committee on the anthropometric system of identifying criminals.

We propose to put this system in force in this country as soon as selected officers have been taught how to take the various measurements required. Though the Board would have preferred to have adopted the French or Bertillon system in its entirety as being completely successful, they propose to follow the modification of the system recommended by the Committee, and adopted in England; for if the descriptive particulars of criminals in Ireland were not made out in the same form as in Great Britain, the practical value of the system would be obviously impaired.

V. DEPARTMENTAL.

31. Mr. J. S. Gibbons was appointed to the Chairmanship of the Board from the 1st March, 1895, vice the Hon. C. F. Bourke, C.B., retired on pension.

Mr. Bourke was appointed an Inspector-General of Prisons in 1868. On the formation of the General Prisons Board in 1877, he became Vice-Chairman, and in 1878 succeeded Sir Walter Crofton in the Chairmanship of the Board.

MARYBOROUGH CONVICT PRISON

(For Invalid Convicts and Intermediate Class Convicts).

Governor's Report.

GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

H. M. Prison, Maryborough,

24th May, 1895.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit my Report on the condition of this prison during the year ended 31st March, 1895, and to forward the usual statistical returns applying to that period.

The conduct of the subordinate officers has been very satisfactory generally. Only in two instances was it found necessary to bring to the special notice of the Board any violation of their duties, whilst I have pleasure in acknowledging the assistance given by the Chief Warder in maintaining discipline amongst officers and prisoners.

There were 71 convicts in custody on 1st April, 1894. Received during the year, 38. Released, 40. Removed to Dundrum Asylum, 1; transferred to Mountjoy Prison, 1, and died 1; remaining in custody 31st March, 1895, 66.

There were fourteen convicts in the Intermediate Class on 1st April, 1894; there were seventeen received into this class during the year; twenty-two released therefrom; remaining nine.

They have been employed outside the prison cultivating land, by which a supply of vegetables sufficient for use of prison for the whole year, and potatoes for three months, have been produced, vegetables have also been sold for use of warders and their families.

A new stable has been built of concrete, together with garden-house and car-house; a gully has been built across the public road, a much needed remedy to a defective water course, and thereby producing a very much increased supply of flushing and washing water; the coal yard has been floored with concrete, and the select class workshop roofed and repaired; two new cottages have been commenced and are at present in process of erection, which when complete will afford accommodation for the two married warders who are at present in receipt of lodging allowances. The necessary repairs to prison buildings have been regularly attended to.

The conduct of the prisoners of the Intermediate Class has been most satisfactory.

The invalid class prisoners when "fit for work" have been employed at shoemaking, tailoring, cooking, cleaning prison, and tilling the garden inside the prison walls; their conduct has been very good, the cases of misconduct being few and "slight;" in no case was it found necessary to use restraint, which, having regard to the fact that many of the invalid class are eccentric and weak-minded, must be considered satisfactory.

MARYBOROUGH MALE CONVICT PRISON.

Governor's Report.

The prisoners of the invalid class are all under special medical treatment, yet their health has been maintained, and only one death occurred during the year.

There have been no escapes, attempts at escape, or suicides during the year.

The Chaplains have been zealous and attentive.

The Medical Officers have been most diligent in their care and attention to the sick and complaining, the use of extras being kept within the limits of moderation and economy.

New scales of dietaries have been introduced which have been found satisfactory.

I regret to have to record that the Resident Medical Officer, Dr. O'Connell, after forty years zealous and efficient services, found it necessary to withdraw from duty through illness on 11th January, and is still on sick leave.

The morning and evening schools have been conducted as in former years, and with very satisfactory results. The library is largely availed of, and the books provided annually are much appreciated.

I certify that the Rules laid down for the government of the prison have been complied with, to the best of my knowledge and belief, except in such cases as have been specially reported to the Board.

The Visiting Committee gave valuable advice and assistance on their visits, which I take the liberty to gratefully acknowledge. They visited on the following dates, viz. :—11th April, 9th May, 13th June, 11th July, 8th August, 12th September, 10th October, 14th November, and 12th December, 1894 ; 9th January, 13th February, and 13th March, 1895.

The valves of the pumps in the deep fresh water-well, which had gradually become worn, failed to be effective on 14th February, and water had to be drawn from town pumps. Temporary drying out pumps were introduced, and after horse-power had been tried without success, a steam-engine was procured, which worked night and day, the water receded below the pumps, which were thoroughly repaired, and worked satisfactorily on 26th April.

The difficulty experienced in drying out the well proves conclusively the abundance of the supply, which has also been found to be of excellent quality.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

JOHN CONDON, Governor.

To Chairman,
General Prisons Board,
Dublin Castle.

SIR,—In sending you my usual Annual Report as Chaplain of H. M.'s Prison, Maryborough, there is not anything that I am aware of calling for special observation. The prisoners were orderly and apparently attentive at all the Services I conducted. The school has I believe been of use to and appreciated by those who attended it. In the discharge of my duties I received every assistance in their power from the intern officers of the prison.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Maryborough,

1st April, 1895.

SIR,—There is not anything particular to note about the prison here during the past year. The conduct of the prisoners at Mass is most orderly, and a fair number of them approach the Sacraments of their Church during the year. I have been informed that they are making satisfactory progress in the educational department.

The discipline of the prison, considering the unfortunate class of men we have here, is very good. The Governor and other officials afford every assistance to the Chaplains in the discharge of their duties.

I remain yours faithfully,

A. PHELAN, P.P.

To the Chairman of Prisons Board,

MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

H. M. Prison, Maryboro',

22nd May, 1895.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit the usual Annual Report, taken chiefly from the records, as the Resident Medical Officer, Dr. O'Connell, is absent from duty in consequence of very impaired health.

Report refers to the year ended 31st March, 1895.

The number of convicts treated in consequence of more serious diseases during the period was 93.

One death resulted from chronic disease.

Eight hundred and eighty-eight cases were treated for minor ailments.

One convict was transferred to the asylum for insane criminals.

Of the subordinate members of the staff eleven were treated for various illnesses. In addition to that duty the families of the staff required a full measure of medical and surgical attention.

MARYBOROUGH MALE CONVICT PRISON.

As to the water supply, an interruption occurred in the yield of the purer source, which continued some weeks, but that source of supply is again available.

The sanitary state generally is apparently satisfactory.

Medical Officer's Report.

I have the pleasure and satisfaction of renewing the former acknowledgments of the support and aid which I continued to experience from the Governor and all subordinate officers during the past year.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

DAVID BALDWIN JACOB, M.D., F.R.C.S.I.

The Chairman, General Prisons Board,
Dublin Castle.

MOUNTJOY CONVICT PRISON.

MOUNTJOY CONVICT PRISON.

GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Governor's Report.

Mountjoy Prison,
April, 1895.

SIR,—As required by Rule 185, I have the honour to report for the year ended 31st March, 1895, on the convict portion of the Mountjoy Prisons.

The conduct of the subordinate officers has been good, and they have been zealous and attentive generally in the discharge of their duties. There were no dismissals or resignations, and few changes of any kind on the convict prison staff during the year. The Chief and Principal Warders have performed their duties intelligently and judiciously.

The convicts have, in general, been well-behaved and amenable; punishments for prison offences were comparatively few and light, but, as may be expected, where the most lawless and desperate of the community are confined, punishment must sometimes be resorted to for the preservation of order and enforcement of rules, but the punishments ordered were only such as were considered necessary to prevent and deter. There was no case of corporal punishment during the year.

There were 107 convicts received under fresh sentences of penal servitude, and twenty-seven on revocation or forfeiture of licences during the year.

There were no escapes or attempts to escape.

The employments of the convicts have been generally same as in former years, viz.:—Tailoring, shoemaking, smithing, &c., for the prison service generally, baking bread for all the Dublin prisons, cutting firewood, making mats, matting, &c., chiefly for other public departments, making wire net-work, and fixing it on the galleries of the convict prison, cleaning, gardening, &c., for the service of the prison, erecting new buildings, and keeping the existing buildings, fences, &c., in proper repair.

MOUNTJOY CONVICT PRISON. — Governor's Report.

The twenty-three additional houses for married warders, mentioned in last report as being in course of erection, outside the prison, by convict labour, are progressing towards completion. It was expected that these houses would be ready for occupation by 1st October next, but the withdrawal of some of the convicts who had been instructed in the skilled work necessary to finish them, for important building work elsewhere, may cause some delay.

A much needed lavatory has been built in connection with the bakery, and fitted with the necessary washing appliances, &c.

The chaplains have, as usual, been most attentive to the spiritual needs of their congregations, and have taken a lively interest in the welfare of many after release.

The school and library arrangements continue the same as detailed in former reports, the teachers have been diligent and painstaking, and the records show good results.

I certify that the rules laid down for the government of the prison have been adhered to, except in such instances as have been brought to the notice of the General Prisons Board.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

GEO. SHEEHAN, Governor.

The Chairman, General Prisons Board.

Protestant Episcopalian Chaplain's Report.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPALIAN CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

H. M. Prison, Mountjoy,
Dublin, April 16, 1895.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit my Annual Report, and am happy to state that the conduct during the past year of the prisoners committed to my pastoral care has been satisfactory. Their deportment in Church during Divine Service has been excellent. They are attentive to religious instruction, and in dealing with them, individually, I have found them disposed to follow my suggestions where, for example, the question of prison discipline was concerned.

The school, library, and hospital of Mountjoy Prison deserve special notice. Men come into gaol entirely illiterate, or nearly so, and on discharge are, in many cases, thanks to the patience and practical skill of the two schoolmasters, able to read, write, and cast up accounts. The library, a model of arrangement, contains a large assortment of religious and secular books, which are read with much interest and, I trust, improvement. The hospital, with a highly qualified medical and nursing staff, has been to me always, as Chaplain, a great auxiliary. The treatment there exerts a softening and ameliorative influence over the patients.

I am most grateful for kind co-operation to the entire staff, and desire to mention the name of George Sheehan, Esq., the Governor, who is unremitting in his exertions, and evinces a complete mastery over all details of prison management.

I have the honour, Sir, to remain your obedient servant,

JOHN H. MACMAHON, M.A., LL.D.

The Chairman,
General Prisons Board.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHAPLAINS' REPORT,

MOUNTJOY CONVICT PRISON.

Roman Catholic Chaplains' Report.

Mountjoy Prison, May, 1895.

SIR,—In submitting our Report to the General Prisons Board, for the year ending March, 1895, we have much pleasure in bearing testimony to the satisfactory condition of the prisoners entrusted to our spiritual charge. During the year they were very attentive to their various religious duties—frequently approaching the Sacraments with edifying dispositions, and listening to our instructions with every mark of respect and devotion.

In our visits to them in the different departments of the Prison, we found them good-humoured and tractable, and with very few exceptions only too anxious to carry out any suggestion we might deem it well to make to them.

The general discipline of the Prison was good—in fact, everything that could be desired.

We beg to tender to the Governor, to the Medical Officers, and to all the other prison officials, our most sincere thanks for the services so kindly rendered us by them in the discharge of our duties as chaplains.

We gladly avail ourselves of this opportunity of wishing you many years of health and happiness in your present position of Chairman of the General Prisons Board.

We have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

M. WALSH, R.C.C.

T. O'DONNELL, Asst. R.C.C.

General Prisons Board,
Dublin Castle.

Presbyterian Chaplain's Report.

H. M. Prison, Mountjoy,
Dublin, May 28, 1895.

SIR,—Nothing, calling for special notice, has occurred among the prisoners under my care during the year. Their demeanour at all the religious services is becoming and reverent. Many of them seem deeply interested, and give hearty attention to the instruction imparted to them. I have frequently conversed with them personally about their past life, both in their cells and in the retiring room. With a very few exceptions they seem grateful, and I believe that some are sincerely anxious to change their ways.

It gives me pleasure to add that, under all circumstances, I receive the ready assistance of the Governors, and all the other officers in the discharge of my duties.

I have the honour, Sir, to be
Your obedient servant,

J. C. JOHNSTON,
Presbyterian Chaplain.

The Chairman of H. M.'s General Prisons Board,

MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

Mountjoy Convict Prison,

9th May, 1895.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit the annual report on the state of health of the officers and prisoners, and on the general sanitary state of this prison for the year ended 31st March last.

During the year there were 51 warders admitted into hospital, chiefly for influenza, bronchitis, tonsillitis, and catarrh. One warder, found to be physically unfit for further service, was discharged. There was no death.

There were 288 convicts admitted into hospital during the year, for diseases detailed in "Form 8." Of these admissions 9 were transferred to the Invalid Prison, 5 were removed to the Criminal Lunatic Asylum, and 1 was released from prison on medical grounds. There was no death. Of convicts not in hospital 3 were transferred to the Invalid Prison.

Influenza was prevalent during the month of March in this prison; as to other diseases, nothing occurred during the year calling for any special remarks.

During the year the sanitary state of the prison was most satisfactory.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

P. O'KEEFFE, M.D.,

Medical Officer.

The Chairman, General Prisons Board,
Dublin Castle.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

H. M. Prison, Grangegorman,

30th May, 1895.

SIR,—I have the honour to submit my annual report on the convict portion of Grangegorman Prison, with statistical returns.

The subordinate officers have been well conducted and attentive to their duties during the year.

The convicts have been exceedingly well conducted and, with one or two exceptions, have shown a determination to overcome their evil habits, and by good conduct and industry to fit themselves for a useful career on leaving prison. Several of these women have been instructed in washing, clear-starching, and ironing, and have become really good laundresses; some have been taught cutting out, sewing and knitting, in the work-room where the clothing for this and other prisons is made, while others have been employed at cleaning, whitewashing and painting. GRANGEGORMAN FEMALE CONVICT PRISON. Superintendent's Report.

The school continues to be worked satisfactorily, the probation class receive cellular instruction, and the advanced classes are taught in school. Marked progress has been made during the year by the women under instruction—two committed—one in October last and the other in December—and who were illiterate, are now able to read and write very well. The schoolmistress has been zealous and painstaking in the performance of her duties. The Chaplains have been attentive and zealous in their administrations.

I certify that the rules laid down for the government of the prison have been adhered to, except in such cases as have been brought to the notice of the Prisons Board.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

CATHERINE J. M'CARTHY,
Superintendent.

Protestant Episcopalian Chaplain's Report.

H. M. Prison, Grangegorman.

SIR,—The following is my report of Grangegorman Convict Prison for the year ending March 31st, 1895:—

There were three convicts in my charge on that date; four were discharged during the year. One of these had earned enough to emigrate; another, having made considerable progress in education during her term of imprisonment, left with a fair promise of doing well; a third, who had been sent for some time to a criminal asylum, returned to her friends; and a fourth, a returned convict, has since been sent back.

In my opinion the discipline of the prison is well maintained, and the prisoners are well cared for, particularly when under treatment in hospital. I have further to acknowledge the courtesy and assistance afforded by the Superintendent and officers in the discharge of my duties as Chaplain.

I remain your obedient servant,

HENRY HOGAN, B.D.,

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT

OF THE

PRISON COMMISSIONERS FOR SCOTLAND.

TO

Her Majesty's Secretary for Scotland.

6 RUTLAND SQUARE,
EDINBURGH, 10*th July* 1895.

In compliance with the requirements of the Statute 40 & 41 Vict. cap. 53, we have the honour to submit to your Lordship the Annual Report on Prisons in Scotland, and on the management of Criminal Lunatics for the year ended 31st March 1895.

During the 12 months from 1st January to 31st December 1894, 52,658 persons were committed to prison. This number exceeds all previous records. Appendix No. III.

The causes which produced such a regrettable fact are not easily determined, but from tables which are given in the Judicial Statistics it appears that the increase of numbers has occurred among persons guilty of drunkenness or charged with being drunk and incapable.

The explanation of this very high number of committals will probably be found in the generally prosperous state of the country and the activity of the police. In strong contrast with the large influx of prisoners in the calendar year of 1894 stands the record of the first three months of 1895. It will be remembered that the temperature during these months was extremely low—outdoor labour was impossible—and considerable distress existed among the poorer classes of the community. The result of this on the prison population was that it fell to the lowest recorded point. The number in custody on 7th August 1894 was 2969, while on the 5th March 1895, even including convicts, it was 2127. It will be found from inspecting Table No. VII. in the Appendix that the variation was caused by the difference in the number of prisoners with short sentences of one month and less than a month.

Appendix No. VII.

The financial year on which we have to report embraces three quarters of 1894 and the first quarter of 1895; and the high numbers of the first portion taken together with the low numbers of the latter period eliminate the peculiar facts just stated, and show the receptions into prison to be 49,275, a decrease of 3383 on the receptions for the 12 months of 1894.

The figures of the year 1894–95, come in this way to have a very close, and in many cases almost exact resemblance to those of 1891–92.

Convicts.

Appendix No. XVIII.

As can be seen from Appendix No. XVIII., the number of convicts has fallen; the decrease in the sentences of penal servitude is quite marked. In 1850, 370 men were sentenced to transportation, but since that maximum was recorded the numbers have fallen not regularly but irregularly until 1894, when only 64 men were sent to convict labour. But not only have the numbers decreased to one-sixth of what they were 45 years ago, but the sentences pronounced have been very much reduced. In 1850, the average length of sentence (taking the life sentences as 20 years) of male convicts was $9\frac{1}{4}$ years—last year it was $4\frac{2}{3}$ years, or almost exactly half of what it was.

The case is the same as regards female convicts, only the fall is still more marked. In 1851, there were 171 women sent to transportation—in 1894, only 6 were sent to convict labour. It would, no doubt, be incorrect to conclude from these figures that serious crime has diminished in the same proportion as these statistics would indicate, but we shall not be far wrong in believing that, while an immense change has been made by Judges in the sentences pronounced by way of shortening the period of detention, serious crime has diminished to some extent.

The decrease in the number of male convicts has been acutely felt at the Peterhead Harbour Works on which they are chiefly employed. Their labour has been utilized in quarrying stone, dressing stone, preparing material for concrete, and mixing the concrete. The majority are industrious and take interest in their work, but as might be expected, a considerable number are prone to idleness, and require strict discipline. There is also a large proportion of the convicts who, on account of physical defects, are excused on medical grounds from performing the full task of work. The numbers so excused are greater than would be at first supposed, but probably not excessive, when we consider that most of them have led lives tending to injuriously affect their bodily strength. Out of 365 men on 25th June, we find that only 216, or less than two-thirds, are fit for full labour—the work of the remainder being more or less reduced according to circumstances. In calculating the results of prison labour, which are at present receiving more attention than formerly, this fact has to be constantly borne in mind, and explains why they are not greater than the returns show them to be.

Appendix No. XVI.

It is worthy of note that out of the 371 male convicts in custody at 31st March 1895, there are 42, or 1 in 9 sentenced for culpable homicide, attempted murder, or murder.

The convicts, as is known, are allowed to earn remission of a fourth part of their sentences by industry coupled with good behaviour, and they are liberated on licence until the expiry of the full period of their sentences. It is to be regretted that so many fail to fulfil the requirements of their licences, and are sent back to prison to complete the term. It will be seen from Table XVII. that out of 102 male convicts admitted during the year 1894–95, 78 were under new sentences, while 24 had forfeited the conditions of their licences to be at liberty, and came back to prison.

As regards the few female convicts still in custody (28 in all), many of them are old women more fit for treatment in a poorhouse than in an institution for inflicting penal servitude.

Ordinary Prisoners.

The Secretary for Scotland was pleased during the past year to appoint a Departmental Committee to consider what change should be made in the treatment of habitual offenders who continue to form the great bulk of ordinary prisoners. It has been so thoroughly proved that repeated short sentences are of no avail, either as deterrent or reformatory, that we shall be glad to try another system of dealing with this difficult class. It seems hopeless to affect them for good unless they are submitted during some lengthened period to a systematic reformatory treatment. The Judicial Statistics for 1894 show that the number of persons committed for drunkenness, breach of peace, and petty assault, formed very nearly three-fourths of the total admissions. The same fact appears in Appendix No. XXI., where, out of 1648 ordinary prisoners in custody on 31st March, 855 had sentences not exceeding 1 month, and 475 had sentences not exceeding 14 days. Only 137 out of the total of 1648 were imprisoned for more than 1 year, a comparatively small number when we remember the great decrease in the number of delinquents sent to penal servitude. Appendix No. XXI.

The variations which occur during the year in the numbers in prison are brought about by the fluctuation of the short sentenced portion of the inmates. The prisoners with sentences of from over 6 months to 2 years varied from 354 to 389—those with sentences of 1 month and under varied from 1445 to 775 during the year, and from 1201 to 775 within a period of 30 days. It follows from this that to secure separate cell accommodation to meet these sudden increments, provision has to be made in the accommodation beyond the average daily numbers, and a similarly increased staff is required. Appendix No. VII.

The behaviour of almost the whole of the prisoners has been free from serious offences in prison. Out of the 51,792 of all classes who have been in custody, 3605 have been punished, the great majority of the offences being not of a criminal description—chiefly idleness, talking, and marking the cell walls. Appendix No. XII.

The Nationalities of the prisoners in custody on 31st March 1895 (as accurately as they can be ascertained readily) were, Scots 1317, English 117, Irish 764, others 20; and the Religions, Presbyterians 1257, Episcopalians 138, Roman Catholics 820. To meet the religious needs of the prisoners, there are 14 Chaplains of the Church of Scotland, 10 Clergymen of the Roman Catholic Church, who supervise the prisoners belonging to that faith, and 5 Clergymen of the Episcopal Church of Scotland. There are also at 9 prisons, ladies of the various denominations who visit the inmates and take an interest in their spiritual welfare. Appendix No. XIX.

Some interest has lately been taken in the question of the number of visits made to prisoners. According to the Rules, visits to convicts by their friends are allowed at intervals varying from 9 months to 2 months, according to the class to which they have attained. In the case of ordinary prisoners, provided their conduct is good, visits may be paid every 3 months, but in addition to these visits from relations and friends, the following have been made in the prisons during the year, viz. :—

Special Visits by order of the Secretary for Scotland or Prison Commissioners or Governors.	Visits to Prisoners by Visiting Ladies.	Visits to Prisoners by their own Clergymen.	Visits by Members of Visiting Committees, Visitors, Sheriffs or Justices.

Labour done by Prisoners.

The labour done by the prisoners is shown in detail in the separate reports on prisons. It consists, first, of the ordinary employment for the service of the various establishments; second, for the execution of repairs to the buildings, so far as they can be carried out by prisoners' labour. Thirdly, in manufacturing uniform for the warders and clothing for the prisoners, sewing bags for the Post Office, making mats and picking oakum, and teasing hemp or hair for sale.

There is in use in Scottish Prisons no mechanical apparatus such as the treadwheel for exacting penal labour; and it is the tasked work on the occupations just stated which affords the only employment. The occupation of picking hemp and oakum rope is not satisfactory, neither as regards the prisoner, who, if he has led a life of idleness, is not induced by oakum picking to like work, nor is it renumerative to the State in helping to lower the cost of the prisoners' maintenance.

The Commissioners are always on the out-look for new industries, but there are many difficulties, as is well-known, surrounding the question of prison labour.

Appendix No. XIV.

Education has been given to 723 prisoners during the year, and the progress made in reading, writing, and arithmetic is shown in Appendix XIV.; the number under Education daily is about 180.

Appendix Nos. XXVIII. to XXX.

The health returns show an increase in the cases of sickness due to the extremely trying season at the close of the financial year.

There were 1221 cases of sickness recorded as compared with 971 reported for the same number of prisoners in 1891–92, but continuing the comparison of the 1891–92 and 1894–95 with identic daily average, we find that though the number of cases of sickness in 1894–95 was greater than in 1891–92 by about 25 per cent, the days' labour lost in 1894–95 by sickness were 10,546, while in 1891–92 with fewer cases they were 11,972. We can learn that the cases last year generally were thus not serious. There were 45 cases of influenza and 40 cases of delirium tremens.

Appendix No. XXXI.

Fifty-one cases of insanity occurred during the year. Of these 40 were seen to be insane on reception or discovered to be so immediately after.

Of the remaining 11 it was found on enquiry that 8 of the prisoners had exhibited insanity before reception. Full details are given of each case in Appendix No. XXXI.

Appendix No. XXX.

Twenty-three persons were released on medical grounds, but of these only 4 were suffering from diseases which appeared after incarceration. See Appendix XXX. There were 15 deaths during the year.

Appendix No. XXVII.

There has been no case of suicide.

Appendix No. VIII.

One man, the sole occupant of the small Prison at Kirkwall, escaped. This incident induces the Commissioners to express their hope that the time may soon come when the small Prisons on the Islands may be closed and handed over to the Local Authorities for Police purposes and Licensed Cells. They are often empty, and the cost of the maintenance of a prisoner in them is inordinately high.

Buildings.

A detail of the building operations of the year is given in Appendix No. XXXIX. The principal work has been the new cell block at Barlinnie General Prison, Glasgow, and the warders' quarters at Maxwelltown. The alterations at Glasgow Prison, which have involved the re-construction of more than half the Prison and the reorganisation of the whole of it, are now practically at an end. It has been a work of considerable difficulty, but the result has been very satisfactory. Appendix No. XXXIX.

Criminal Lunatics.

Seven new cases were admitted during the year to the Department for Lunatics at Perth, and 3 women who had been conditionally discharged were readmitted,—one in consequence of a new attack of mania, 1 because of a failure in bodily health, and the third owing to the death of the guardian who had charge of her. Appendix No. XXIV.

Three men were sent to ordinary asylums on the expiration of their present sentences, and 1 man died.

Dr M'Naughtan, who superintends the Department, continues to conduct it with our full approbation and that of the Visiting Commissioners in Lunacy, who report that 'the state of the work, the condition of the inmates, and the management of the 'establishment continue to be very satisfactory.'

Dr M'Naughtan reports that 'in both departments there have been a number of 'acute cases under treatment, accompanied by dangerous and homicidal delusions, but 'with these exceptions the lunatics, as a whole, have been quiet and orderly. The 'male outworkers are employed regularly in the garden, and the tradesmen patients 'find suitable occupation in the new workshop. The females, as usual, are employed 'cooking, washing, knitting, &c. The general health has been good, and I am glad 'to state that there are no serious accidents nor assaults to record.'

Criminal Registry.

During the past year the subject of the more exact registration of habitual Criminals has been under the consideration of the Commissioners, and at their suggestion the Secretary for Scotland has approved of the partial introduction of the anthropometric system into Scotland, for criminals who travel beyond the Border, while at the same time the Scottish system of having centres in various parts of the country for full records of all Registered criminals is maintained. In order to make the Register more useful, it has been found advisable to restrict somewhat the numbers inscribed upon it, which, for the present, it will be confined to those indicated in the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, and such other special cases as the Chiefs of constabulary may suggest.

Staff.

With a few exceptions the conduct of the Staff has been excellent. The following changes among the Superior Officers have occurred :— Appendix No. XXXII.

Aberdeen.—The Rev. William Stopani, Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman, died 29th October 1894, and has been succeeded by the Rev. James M'Gregor.

Ayr.—The Rev. William O'Shaughnessy, Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman, resigned 14th April 1894, and was succeeded by the Right Rev. Bishop Turner.

Barlinnie and Glasgow. — The Rev. Camillus Carter, Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman, resigned, and was succeeded on 4th December 1894 by the Rev. Paul M. O'Neill.

Glasgow.—Dr J. F. Sutherland, Medical Officer, resigned on 31st January 1895, and was succeeded by Dr James Devon.

Maxwelltown.—The Right Rev. Bishop Turner, Roman Catholic visiting Clergyman, resigned on 16th April 1894, and was succeeded by the Rev. Daniel O'Brien.

Stornoway.—The Rev. Alexander Stuart, Chaplain, resigned on 31st May 1894, and was succeeded by the Rev. Hector Mackinnon.

Visiting Committees.

The Visiting Committees have had frequent meetings and made numerous visits to the Prisons throughout the year.

We have the honour to be,

Your Lordship's very obedient Servants,

No. XXVI.—REPORT by Sir Douglas Maclagan, M.D., Medical Adviser to the Prison Commissioners and Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in the University of Edinburgh, on the Health of the Prison Population, during the year ending 31st March 1895.

I am again able to give a satisfactory report of the Health History of the Prisons during the year 1894–95. The total number of deaths was 15, being 5·8 per mille of the average daily number of prisoners (2556). These numbers confirm the statement which I made last year, that for several years there had been a gradually diminishing mortality among the Prison population.

The number of deaths from diseases more or less involving the lungs formed nearly one-half of the total mortality, but of these only 1, a case of pneumonia, was held to have begun after incarceration, another of pneumonia having the disease upon him when admitted, and a third, a young man of 28, who died of hæmoptysis, whose blood-spitting began after his admission, may likely have had some lurking mischief in the lungs previously. The rest were chronic cases in debilitated constitutions.

In 1 case erysipelas is recorded in connection with the death; it had supervened in a case of disease of the bones of the spine. There were a few other cases of erysipelas, nearly equally distributed between the two sexes, but none of them were fatal.

Of other zymotics little was seen. One case of scarlet fever occurred in a female, but the due precautions taken prevented it from spreading. No typhus or typhoid occurred, but there were a few cases of febricula. There was a considerable number of cases of influenza, 45 in all, none of them fatal, and more than one-half of them in the Convict Prison at Peterhead, doubtless owing to more exposure to the severity of the weather.

The General Health of the prisoners has been excellent, the result of good food, good air, good medical attendance, and, probably most important of all, regulated lives.

DOUGLAS MACLAGAN,
Medical Adviser to the Commissioners.

No. XXXVIII.—Report by Inspector for year ending 31st March 1895.

Gentlemen,—

I beg to submit my Annual Report.

I have, in accordance with your instructions, inspected the following Prisons:—

Aberdeen,	Inverness,
Ayr,	Kirkwall,
Barlinnie (General),	Lerwick,
Dundee,	Maxwelltown,
Edinburgh,	Perth (General),
Glasgow,	Stornoway,
Greenock,

at the periods directed by you, and have carefully inquired into any complaints or requests made by prisoners and any other matters as requested by you, duly reporting any information necessary.

I have found the prisons clean and orderly, the cells tidy, and every care has been exercised for the security and health of the prisoners.

On my visits of inspection I have always examined the diets and provisions and found these satisfactory, and the cooking carefully attended to.

I have much pleasure in reporting the staff at all the prisons as generally efficient. The general conduct of the officers, both discipline and clerical, has been most satisfactory, and all the duties have been conducted with zeal and ability.

I have always found the discipline books, ledgers, and other official records duly posted to date and carefully kept.

During the year unusually few changes have taken place throughout the staff.

The exceptional severity of the winter and the prevalent epidemic of influenza, caused for a few weeks an increased sick list amongst the general staff and warders, at some prisons more than at others; but as the number of prisoners happened to be low, there was not much inconvenience in consequence, and it was only at one prison that extra help, entirely due to that cause, was obtained for a brief period.

With one or two exceptions all the officers are now in good health and fit for duty.

The quarters for warders at Ayr have been completed and occupied: those at Maxwelltown completed and on the eve of occupation.

The medical officers have been at all times most constant and regular in their visits to the prisons; and attentive in all cases of sickness.

The general health of the prisoners throughout the prisons has been good.

During the winter and unusually long period of inclement weather the sick list amongst the prisoners was slight compared with that amongst the officers; and although there was some inconvenience through frozen and burst pipes, &c., the heating systems did not fail, and the cells were kept warm and comfortable. It was only at Peterhead Convict Prison that the sick list was heavy during the first three months of 1895, and that the medical officer attributed to influenza.

Altogether there were 1190 cases of illness (Peterhead Convict Prison included), 15 deaths, all from natural causes, and 22 prisoners were liberated or removed to hospital before expiry of sentence on account of sickness. Of these, two recovered sufficiently to be returned to prison until expiry of sentence.

No suicide has occurred, one attempt at suicide was reported at Barlinnie prison.

There has not been any case of capital punishment during the year.

The chaplains at all the prisons, as also the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Visiting Clergymen, have been attentive and earnest in their duties. They generally interest themselves to some extent in teaching the prisoners, especially the young; also superintending the issue of books, educational, and reading, the maintenance of the library, and its efficiency generally. The chaplains take considerable interest in the societies instituted for helping prisoners after liberation.

The lady visitors, also the Sisters of Charity, both Episcopalian and Roman Catholic, co-operate largely with regard to the female prisoners, and their assistance is of great service.

The following Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies, and other local Benevolent Institutions are in operation at the various prison localities:—

Aberdeen.—A Local Committee.
Ayr.—Help by a fund from a small legacy.
Barlinnie.—Glasgow Societies.
Dundee.—Local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.
Edinburgh.—Magdalene Home, Alnwick Hill Home, Local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.
Glasgow.—Whitevale Shelter, Hill Street Shelter, Salvation Army Home, Magdalene Home, and local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.
Greenock.—Local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society, for females only.
Inverness.—Rescue Home (for females) and Local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies.
Maxwelltown.—None. But local help is given in deserving cases.
Perth.—Local Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.
Kirkwall, Lerwick, Peterhead, Stornoway.—No local society, but prisoners on liberation are recommended to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society that they select.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good. The percentage of punishment has been much the same as last year, the average over all being 8·2 compared with 8·3.

The percentage increased at Dundee, Edinburgh, and Greenock, but declined elsewhere.

No offences have occurred of an unusual kind.

With few exceptions, punishment has only been necessary to check persistent idleness, attempts at communication, and disobedience of orders. It is also necessary to check wilful or careless damage to public property, such as the destruction of the earthenware food dishes and other basins used in the cells. When deserved such carelessness is punished, as often as possible by forfeiture of marks, counting towards gratuity, equivalent to the damage done. Lately, however, steps have been taken to check accidental damage of this sort in another way, namely, by arranging the crockery in the cells so as to limit its movement as much as possible. This will be under observation during the year, and reported on.

There was one escape of a male prisoner, from Kirkwall Prison.

The Visiting Committees connected with the prisons have held the statutory annual meetings; and members thereof have frequently visited the prisons, and also attended in any urgent case when called on by the Governor.

The general industry of the prisoners has been good throughout the prisons. And, on the whole, Governors report that work of a remunerative character has been more easily obtained than during the previous year.

The demand for picked oakum has been decreasing for some years, and there is in consequence a steady decline of the number of prisoners employed in picking oakum. It is now only taken to as a temporary and last resource when other work is not immediately obtainable.

I have also, periodically, visited in accordance with your directions, the following police cells licensed for the detention of prisoners under Section 30 of the Prison Act, 1877.

Banff,	Hawick,
Campbeltown,	Inveraray,
Dingwall,	Jedburgh,
Dunblane,	Kinross,
Dunfermline County,	Kirkcaldy,
Dunfermline City,	Lochmaddy,
Dunoon,	Montrose,
Elgin,	Oban,
Falkirk,	Port Ellen,
Forfar,	Portree,
Fort-William,	Stirling,
Galashiels,	Stonehaven,
Greenlaw,	Thurso,
Haddington,	Wigtown,

Also the Police Cells licensed for three days under Summary Procedure Act, 1864.

Fraserburgh,	Lochgilphead,
Huntly,	Peterhead.

I have carefully inspected them and seen that there was a sufficient supply of clothing and bedding to meet the general requirements in each case.

That the cells were clean and orderly and sanitary arrangements satisfactory.

That the official books were properly kept and recorded to date.

That these cells were periodically visited by members of the Visiting Committees.

I have brought to your notice any matters requiring attention, or desirable for the utility and security of these places of temporary detention.

I have the honour to be,

Gentlemen,

Your obedient Servant,

Wm. Willis, Inspector of Prisons.

To the Prison Commissioners for Scotland, Edinburgh.

Aberdeen Prison.

Average daily number of prisoners,	47	20	67

With the exception of a male warder, who has been reduced and transferred to another prison, the staff has been efficient, and all the duties have been performed in a satisfactory manner.

The prison registers and books have been properly kept and posted.

The prison has been kept clean and orderly, and the stores and articles therein in good order and upheld sufficient for the requirements. The provisions have been of good quality and properly cooked.

The Visiting Committee held one general meeting, and members thereof visited the prison on 11 occasions.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good.

Nothing has occurred calling for special remark.

The medical officer has been frequent in his visits and attentive in all cases of sickness. He reports the sanitary condition of the prison as "exceedingly satisfactory."—The general health of the prisoners has also been good, 18 cases of sickness were treated against 21 last year; no deaths occurred.

The chaplain has been attentive to his duties and divine service on Sundays has been regularly performed.

The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society is active in its endeavours, and by its report states that the total number of cases dealt with was 21 males, 14 females, total 35.

Barlinnie General Prison.

	M.	F.	T.
Average daily number of prisoners,	662	–	662

The staff is generally efficient, and all the duties have been performed in a satisfactory manner. The rules and regulations have been enforced. The prison registers and other books and returns have been properly kept and duly posted.

The prison has been kept clean and orderly, and all the articles therein have been properly taken care of The provisions have been good in quality, and the diets properly cooked.

The supplies have been sufficient for all requirements.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been satisfactory.

One attempt at suicide was reported.

Nothing unusual has occurred calling for special report.

The sanitary condition of the prison is reported by the medical officer as 'exceptionally good.'

The general health of the prisoners has been good; 431 cases of illness were treated; 3 deaths occurred from natural causes; last year the numbers were 391 and 6 respectively; 8 cases were liberated or removed to hospital previous to expiry of sentence on account of sickness.

There was an unusually heavy sick list amongst the officers during the latter part of the winter, attributed to influenza and the severity of the weather. Extra help was not called in, as the number of prisoners happened to be lower than usual. With one or two exceptions, all the officers are now in good health and fit for duty.

The chaplain has attended to his duties and divine service has been conducted every Sunday—also morning prayers on week days; and the prisoners visited in their cells. Sunday services are also conducted by the Episcopalian and Roman Catholic Visiting Clergymen. Prisoners of these churches are also visited in their cells.

Education is carried on by the teaching warders under direction of the chaplain. The chaplain reports with regard to the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society:—'That 41,609 prisoners and convicts have been dealt 'with during the 5½ years ending December 1894, and '4290 have been placed in work.' The Annual Report by the Prisoners' Aid Society says,—'It will be 'observed that only about 1 in 10 of those who have 'come to us asked for work. This is to be accounted 'for by the fact that the great bulk of them were short-'sentenced men, two or three days in prison for drunk-'enness, whose employers were quite prepared to rein-'state them in their situations. Others were habitua-'criminals, whom we could not venture to place in 'work, nor indeed were they at all anxious for it. In '1894, 1099 discharged prisoners and convicts got work 'through the Society. The very important work of 'sending young lads, generally convicted for the first 'time, to farm work is still continued with excellent 'results. The number of these lads sent to Arran and 'elsewhere in 1894 was 45. Good accounts have been 'heard of these lads except in a very few cases.'

The general industry of the prisoners has been good, and some work of a fairly remunerative character has been obtained.

Marks counting towards gratuity have been carefully allotted, according to the prisoners ability and industry, in all cases when the sentence admits.

The staff generally is efficient, and the duties have been performed in a satisfactory manner. At the end of the year the prison lost the services of Dr Sutherland by his transfer to the Lunacy Board of Scotland. Dr Sutherland had been over 12½ years in the prison, and his experience and knowledge were of much value to the service. Dr Devon has been appointed to succeed him.

All the rules and regulations have been enforced.

The prison registers and books have been properly kept and duly posted.

The prison has been kept clean and orderly. The stores and workshops were in good order and conveniently arranged, all the articles therein have been properly taken care of. The supplies have been sufficient for the requirements.

The provisions have been of good quality, and the cooking of the diets properly attended to.

The Visiting Committee held one general meeting, and members thereof visited the prison on 13 occasions.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good, and no offences of a specially serious nature have occurred. One or two females persisted in riotous, insubordinate conduct, one especially seemed beyond all control, but tact and firmness, without resorting to excessive or prolonged punishment, resulted in her becoming amenable to reason.

Nothing has occurred calling for special remark.

The boundary wall has been raised, where it was much needed.

Additional bathing accommodation is being constructed for the female department. The grounds within the walls are now being cleared of building material.

The medical officer has been constant in attending to his duties. He reports the sanitary condition of the prison as satisfactory, and that 248 cases of illness were treated, 2 deaths occurred from natural causes, and 6 prisoners were liberated or removed to hospital on account of sickness prior to expiration of sentence, the numbers last year being 270—no deaths, and 7 removals respectively

The male lunatics are employed in garden work, and the females in knitting, sewing and looking after poultry. The eggs form a considerable remunerative item.

The Medical Officers reports the sanitary condition of the prison as satisfactory.

The general health of the prisoners has been good, 72 cases of illness received treatment, and 2 deaths occurred, both from natural causes.

The Medical Officer is also Medical Superintendant of the Criminal lunatic department, and in that as well as the prison has been most assiduous to his duties and in attending to the sick.

The Chaplain has duly attended to his duties. He conducts Divine service on Sundays and morning prayers on week-days.

The Roman Catholic visiting clergyman also conducts Divine Services on Sundays, and the Episcopalian visiting clergyman conducts Divine Services on Monday afternoons.

Prisoners are visited in their cells and Religious and Secular Instruction imparted.

The Chaplain reports thus on the Prisoners' Aid Societies :—

'The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies in Glasgow, 'Edinburgh, Greenock, Dundee and Perth, assist 'prisoners on discharge. Altogether 276 prisoners 'have been dealt with by these societies.'

The Episcopalian visiting clergyman states :—

'Excellent work in giving aid to prisoners on their 'discharge is done by the Perth Discharged Prisoners' 'Aid Society. Occasionally work is found for them: 'frequently aid in money is given.'

The Roman Catholic visiting clergyman writes—

'The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies of Glasgow, 'Edinburgh, Dundee and Perth have rendered valuable 'assistance in looking for work and lodgings for prisoners 'on liberation; almost all discharged during past year 'have sought such assistance from them. Some prefer 'their gratuity to be forwarded to their clergymen.'

The prisoners have been kept industriously employed, and work of a suitable and remunerative character has been obtained.

Marks counting towards gratuity are carefully allotted to prisoners according to their ability and industry in all cases where the length of sentence admits.

The Medical Officer reports :—158 cases of illness received treatment; 2 deaths, both from natural causes; 2 removals to hospital prior to liberation on account of sickness.

Average daily number of convicts,	319	0	319

The governor reports that the officers are qualified for their duties, and that generally they are zealous in the performance of them, and that the convicts have been fairly industrious and well behaved. There were two inspections of the prison during the year by the visitors appointed by the Secretary for Scotland. The Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies throughout the country have with few exceptions taken charge of the convicts on their liberation, and have assisted them in procuring work.

Divine service is regularly conducted by the chaplain on the forenoon of every Sunday, and he spends the afternoon in visiting and conversing with the convicts on religious matters in their cells. Episcopalian and Roman Catholic convicts attend Divine Service on Sundays, conducted by the visiting Episcopalian and Roman Catholic clergymen. They are also visited from time to time by these clergymen.

The medical officer reports that the sanitary state of the prison is excellent, and that with the exception of the first 3 months of 1895, when influenza and the severe weather caused a heavy sick list, the general health of prisoners was 'very good indeed.'

No. XXXIX.—REPORT ON WORKS EXECUTED OR IN PROGRESS DURING THE YEAR ENDED 31st MARCH 1895.

As formerly prison labour is largely employed in the execution of repairs. It has also been utilized in some new buildings and alterations at some of the prisons. It is of considerable advantage to the prisoner to be occupied in some of the building trades in prison, as he may learn something to help him to earn his bread on release, and at the same time the system is economical for the State. Many of the Governors and the Warders acting under them, take a great interest in carrying on works of building construction. The storm which occurred in December, and the severe frosts of the first months of 1895, necessitated an unusual amount of repairs.

1. Aberdeen Prison.—Besides the ordinary work of maintenance during the year, the completion of the new cells for females, and the additional Warders' quarters, occupied some months at the beginning of the year.

2. Ayr Prison.—The new Warders' quarters were completed and occupied. The accommodation of the female prison was increased by adding one hospital and one association cell, so as to set free 6 ordinary cells for prisoners, whose numbers have been latterly high. Sundry subsidiary works in alterations of boundary wall and separation of the males from the females' department have been carried out, largely by prison labour. A weighbridge has also been provided at the prison gate.

3. Barlinnie General Prison near Glasgow.—A new cell building has been commenced, and at the end of the year was advanced about one quarter towards completion; by it it is intended to provide for the sudden rises in the number of short sentenced prisoners which occur at certain times during the year.

The accommodation for unmarried Warders has been increased, as it was found far below requirement. The addition was made by raising the existing building by one floor.

The enclosure of a large space of rocky ground by a concrete boundary wall has also been pushed forward. This work has been done by the prisoners very successfully.

Prisoners have also been engaged in making proper roadways round the building inside the walls.

4. Dundee Prison.—The only new work has been on the boundary between the prison and the City Police Station, where a wall has been raised for the greater privacy of both establishments.

5. Edinburgh Prison.—A slight addition has been made to the accommodation for female Warders, and 10 compartments for ensuring separation at the reception and discharge of female prisoners have been constructed.

6. Glasgow Prison.—A variety of services consequent on the reconstruction of the main prison buildings have been carried out very satisfactorily by prison labour.

New workshops have been built, and a bath house, a silent cell for noisy women, and a mortuary, have been begun. A second exercise yard has been laid out; the boundary wall has been raised at some insecure points. Electric bells are being fitted to a large number of old cells which were without means of communication, and some empty spaces have been advantageously converted into cells for females. The chapel walls have also been coloured and decorated by prisoners.

The contractor finished the erection of the six Warders' Quarters, which were in progress during the previous year, and are now occupied.

7. Maxwelltown Prison.—The erection of the new building for Warders' Houses has been carried to completion. That part of the work which could be undertaken by prisoners was done by them under the direction of the Governor. The disinfecting chamber has been reconstructed.

8. Perth General Prison.—With a view to economy, a small vertical steam boiler has been fixed in the kitchen, thus allowing the use of a large Cornish boiler to be discontinued.

9. Peterhead Convict Prison.—At this prison, where the building works are carried out solely by convicts, a detached cell for noisy prisoners has been constructed. Several sanitary works have also engaged a good deal of time, and in addition, the convicts have re-erected the corrugated iron house brought from Glasgow, where it had served as a chapel. It is intended to utilize it as a Recreation Room for the Warders and other officers.

A belfry has been fitted upon the entrance gate of the prison.

10. Stornoway Prison.—The quarters occupied by the Governor have been enlarged.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORTS OF THE OFFICERS OF CONVICT PRISONS.

OF

THE DIRECTORS OF CONVICT PRISONS

For the Year 1894–95.

SIR, Home Office, August 1895.

WE have the honour to present our Annual Report on the Convict Prisons in England, for the year ended 31st March 1895, as required by Act of Parliament, and to append the usual Statistical Returns, with extracts from Reports, &c. from the various prisons.

2. The number of male convicts received into the convict prisons under fresh sentences during the year ended 31st March 1895 was 828, besides 151 with licences revoked or re-committed to serve out the period remitted from their former sentences.

3. The number of female convicts received into the convict prisons under fresh sentences during the year ended 31st March 1895 was 89, besides 27 with licences revoked or re-committed to serve out the period remitted from their former sentences.

4. The following table illustrates the great and progressive decrease in the number of sentences for serious crime:—

Yearly Average Number of Persons Sentenced on Indictment to Penal Servitude in England and Wales.		Estimated Average Population of England and Wales.
During 5 years ended 31st December 1859 -	2,589	19,257,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1864 -	2,800	20,370,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1869 -	1,978	21,631,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1874 -	1,622	23,088,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1879 -	1,633	24,700,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1884 -	1,427	26,313,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1889 -	945	27,830,000
„ 5 years ended 31st December 1894 -	858	29,392,000

5. The decrease in the convict prison population, which has resulted from the smaller number sentenced, and the shorter sentences (see previous Reports), is shown by the following figures, which, for the reason given in our former Reports, rather understate (particularly in the earlier years) the effective decrease for purposes of comparison :—

6. The Penal Servitude Act, 1891 (which came into operation on the 5th August 1891), by which Courts of Justice are enabled to pass sentences of penal servitude of three years and upwards, instead of being restricted to terms of five years and upwards, has been freely taken advantage of, as the following figures show:—

7. The average length of the sentences of all the convicts in convict and local prisons on 31st March 1894 was 7·3 years for males and 7·4 years for females. On 31st March 1895 it was 7·1 for males and 7·6 years for females.

8. Appendix 14, which gives the ages of the prisoners in convict prisons on 31st March 1895, shows that there are none under 16, and only 67 between 16 and 21.

9. Portsmouth Convict Prison, from which the last prisoners were removed on the 31st July 1894, was closed on the 20th November, and the site and buildings have since been handed over to the Admiralty, to be utilized as Naval Barracks.

10. Consequent on the decision not to proceed with the construction of a harbour of refuge by convict labour, there has been no outdoor employment for convicts at Dover. At Portland and Dartmoor Prisons, however, there is a demand for convicts for employment on the structural rearrangements of those prisons. We saw no good reason, moreover, for the great expense of maintaining the establishment at Dover. We, therefore, decided to withdraw the convicts remaining there, and this was done on the 30th January last, the buildings being left in the charge of a caretaker.

11. The work of converting the old local prison at Aylesbury into a prison for female convicts is now approaching completion, and it is intended to transfer the establishment from Woking early next October, when the latter prison will be handed over to the War Department for conversion into barracks.

12. The construction of large-sized cells at Dartmoor and Portland Prisons is being proceeded with. At the former 590 cells have actually been built, and the remaining small cells will gradually be replaced, the stone for building a third block of cells being in course of preparation. At the latter prison one hall has been razed to the ground, the site cleared, and the rebuilding commenced.

13. At Dartmoor, quarters for six officers have been completed and ten are in course of construction; whilst, at Portland, sixteen have been completed and twelve are being proceeded with.

14. At page 10, will be found the notes by the Medical Inspector containing full particulars as to the health of the prisoners during the year under report. The number of deaths from natural causes was 40, or 11·3 per 1,000, which is 2·8 lower than that of the preceding year.

15. It is remarkable that only two deaths are attributed to pulmonary phthisis, giving a proportion of deaths from that cause of only 5 per cent., which is much lower than that which obtains among the population at large.

16. There were only five releases on medical grounds during the year.

17. A useful comparison is drawn by the Medical Inspector between the number of cases of insanity occurring in convict prisons and amongst the adult pauper population, which shows that the ratio of the former is only a mere fraction of that of the latter.

18. During the year, an outbreak of typhoid occurred at Parkhurst Prison, the cause of which was stated by the Medical Inspector and by Dr. Theodore Thomson, the Local Government Board Inspector, to be the fouling of the water obtained from a well belonging to the Borough of Newport and from which the prison supply is taken. The outbreak was by prompt measures confined within moderate limits, and steps are being taken for procuring a supply of pure water.

19. The sanitary condition of the prison buildings is reported to be satisfactory.

20. There has been no escape from any convict prison since 1885.

21. The conduct of the prisoners has been, on the whole, good. Out of 4,855 males, 3,150 received no punishment, and of 312 females 258 received no punishment. The great mass of the convicts behave well, misconduct being confined to a comparatively small number.

22. The percentage of prisoners on whom corporal punishment has been inflicted has steadily decreased during the last three years, as shown by the following figures:—

Year.	Number of Male Prisoners.	Cases of Corporal Punishment.	Percentage.
1892–3	5,252	50	·95
1893–4	5,176	39	·75
1894–5	4,855	26	·53

23. On the 31st March 1895 there were in Western Australia, maintained at the expense of the Imperial Government, 79 persons, of whom nine were prisoners, four ticket-of-leave holders out of employment, 21 lunatics, and 45 invalids and paupers.

24. In June 1894 our colleague, Mr. Wakeford, relinquished his office of Director, thus closing a long career of valuable public service, during 22 years of which he was a Director of Convict Prisons, in addition to several during which he was Comptroller-General of Convicts in Western Australia.

2. The public loss sustained by the retirement of Sir E. Du Cane has been referred to in our Report on Local Prisons. He was, in the early stages of his career, more particulary identified with Convict Prisons, and his name will always be remembered as having helped to begin, as having continued, and brought to a high state of perfection what is known as the Penal Servitude System. His name, too, will be associated always with the large undertakings by convict labour, the value and success of which are due largely to his guiding and controlling genius.

We have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient Servants,
(Signed) E. Ruggles-Brise, Chairman.
W. J. Stopford,
R. S. Mitford,
M. Clare Garsia, } Directors.

To the Right Honourable
The Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Notes by the Medical Inspector.

(For Medical Statistics, vide Appendix No. 18.)

The daily average population of the convict prisons of England during the year ended March 31, 1895, was 3,523. The number of deaths from natural causes was 40, being at the rate of 11·3 per 1,000. This death-rate, which is decidedly lower than that of the year previous, is slightly above the average for the ten years 1885-94. The releases on medical grounds were only five in number, and as the diseases or conditions which were the ground of release would not be likely (except in one case) to prove fatal, the rate of mortality would not have been materially affected if the convicts released had remained in prison. It is remarkable that only two deaths are attributed to pulmonary phthisis, and it may be inferred from this fact that the convicts are well supplied with fresh air, notwithstanding that some of the sleeping cells are small. On the other hand, the proportion of deaths from cancer to deaths from other causes is relatively high, as has happened in former years. In one of these cases the disease existed prior to reception. Ten of the forty deaths resulted from disease of the heart. In only two of these cases did the disease originate after admission into prison.

Thirteen convicts were found to be insane during the year. Of these, five were congenitally defective, so that in only eight cases can the unsoundness be said to have originated in prison. One only was a prisoner of good education. Twelve of the thirteen were certified as insane, and removed to Broadmoor; and one was liberated. The forms of insanity were as follows: acute mania, two cases; mania, two; dementia, seven; chronic mania, one; acute melancholia, one.

In comparing the rate of insanity among the convict population with that of the population in general regard must, of course, be paid to the fact that the two populations differ in essential particulars. To expect convicts who are drawn from the lowest strata of society, who inherit defects that have been handed on from father to son, from generation to generation, and who are, as a body, environed by most unfavourable conditions from infancy onwards, to manifest a liability to insanity no greater than that of a population whose antecedents have been very different, is obviously unreasonable. Yet it is a fact that some critics of prison management make no allowance for these varying conditions and circumstances. They compare like with unlike, and are surprised at the result.

According to Table IV. of the Forty-Eighth Report of the Commissioners in Lunacy, showing the ratio of pauper lunatics to paupers on the 1st January 1894, there were 211,610 male adult paupers in England and Wales, and of these as many as 36,088 were lunatics; in other words, the percentage of male adult pauper lunatics to male adult paupers, on that date, was no less than 17·05. As convicts are drawn from a still lower social stratum, it might be expected that the rate of insanity among them would be in excess of the rate prevalent among paupers, but, if it were so the population of the convict side of Broadmoor Asylum would be much larger than it is at the present moment. As a matter of fact, the ratio of insanity among convicts in England and Wales is a mere fraction of that of adult paupers. It must be remembered that if imprisonment is occasionally a cause of insanity, it acts as a preventive of that disease in a much larger number of cases. Regular work, diet, and rest, with enforced abstinence from drink, worry, and excitement, make for sanity; and I cannot but think that they account for the comparatively low rate of insanity prevailing among the convict population of this country.

Parkhurst prison may now be said definitely to have taken the place of Woking; as the invalid prison of the convict department. The medical officer reports that 261 prisoners were received during the year, and that of these only 36 were sound in mind and body. The daily average number under treatment in hospital has consequently been large, viz., 77·1. Plans have been prepared for a considerable extension of the hospital to meet the requirements of this invalid population. About 80 of the inmates are subjects of cardiac disease, and it is therefore not surprising that sudden deaths are of occasional occurrence. It should be mentioned that invalid convicts are treated as invalids first and convicts afterwards, that is to say, they are exempted from ordinary labour and discipline, and are subjected to no conditions likely to aggravate any existing disease.

In the month of October a few cases of typhoid fever occurred in Newport; these rapidly increased in number, until the outbreak assumed the proportions of an epidemic, in which the prison to some extent shared. Happily owing to the precautions taken by Dr. Smalley, the medical officer, the outbreak in the prison was confined within moderate limits. Nineteen cases occurred among the convicts, and eight among the officers and their families occupying prison quarters. Only one case proved fatal among the convicts, and only two in the prison quarters, or a percentage of 11 on the total number of cases. This small mortality reflects great credit upon the medical staff, whose responsibilities in the event of an outbreak of any infectious disease in a prison are always very serious. The cause of the epidemic was undoubtedly some fouling of the water supplied from a well at Carisbrooke to the town of Newport and to the prison. Active steps are now being taken by the town authorities with the object of procuring water from a source which will render pollution practically impossible.

The condition of the prison buildings generally, throughout the service, as to ventilation, warming, and drainage continues to be all that can be desired.

NOTE 1.—The numbers returned as in Local Prisons in England and Wales for 1872–78 do not include a few convicts who were probably in some of the Prisons now closed, and from which no information is obtainable.

NOTE 2.—The numbers in the earlier years might fairly be taken as higher, as some of the convicts in Western Australia would have been longer in obtaining their tickets-of-leave had they been serving under the regulations now existing in English prisons, and would, consequently, have been in prison.

It seems desirable to explain that, although this return is made out to show the comparing the costs of the prisons with each other. The convict prisons differ in their absolutely distinct establishments, each performing exactly similar duty. † An alteration has been made in the periods of rendering certain accounts, the effect of which is that a total sum of 6,726*l.* is charged against this year less than would otherwise have been charged.

Note (A.)—The convict establishment in Western Australia was transferred to the Colony on 31st March 1886. Payment is made by Imperial Government for maintenance of convicts and lunatics at the rate of 45*l.* per annum, and of invalids at the rate of 42*l.*

Note (B.)—Up to the year 1886-7 the cost of the Directors' Office, amounting to about 9,700*l.* per annum, was shown in these returns, but as the Office of the Directors of Convict Prisons and that of the Commissioners of Prisons have now been amalgamated the cost, which has been much reduced, cannot be shown separately.

Appendix No. 17.

Report on Works executed or in Progress during the Year ended 31st March 1895.

Aylesbury.—Works for the conversion of the local prison into a prison for female convicts, commenced in 1890, have been continued. Those carried out during the past year have been in connection with the provision of quarters for governor, chaplain, assistant surgeon, gatekeeper, storekeeper, and five warders; also the provision of baths, gas boxes in the cells, and the fitting up of one wing for local prisoners under trial at the Assizes.

Borstal.—A covered way has been erected to connect the entrances to B and C halls, a porch to a principal warder's quarter, and outer doors fitted to the porches of the storekeeper's and chief warder's quarters.

Dartmoor.—A bath house containing 19 baths, and considerable additions to the laundry, commenced last year, have been completed. Quarters for four principal warders and six warders have been in course of construction and six have been completed. A warder's quarter (No. 11 Barrack Quarters) has been reconstructed. The workshops for tailors, shoemakers and bagmakers, provided with better lighting and ventilation, also means for heating, and works are in progress to provide them with closets and urinals. The governor's and deputy governor's quarters have been provided with hot water pipes in halls and passages. A new gas holder has been erected at the gas works, and a larger gas main partly laid. In view of the construction of large-sized cells to take the place of the existing sleeping bunks of the prisoners, the granite quarries have been opened and 60 tons of stone have been quarried. Works have been commenced for the filtration and storage of the Prison Leat water to be used for potable purposes.

Parkhurst.—The earth closets at this prison have been abolished and water closets substituted for them. The assistant surgeon's quarters have been in part underpinned in consequence of the foundations giving way, and sanitary improvements in them have been carried out. The conversion of an old pump house into a Jews' synagogue, commenced last year, has been completed.

Portland.—The reconstruction of the prison drainage has been continued. New washhouses have been built for the 16 families occupying C quarters. 16 new quarters for married warders have been completed, and 12 more are in hand. The foundry commenced in a previous year has been completed, and sheds built for the prisoners working the stone at the quarries. The fire-main has been extended to the officers' schools. In view of the construction of large-sized cells to replace the existing sleeping bunks, one of the halls has been pulled down, and the site cleared for rebuilding.

Portsmouth.—This prison has been dismantled, closed, the available materials sent to other prisons for re-use, and the premises handed over to the Admiralty.

Alten Beamish,
Surveyor.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORTS OF THE OFFICERS OF CONVICT PRISONS.

AYLESBURY PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The conduct of the subordinate officers has been excellent.

Several prisoners for trial at the assizes and sessions were lodged here while the Courts were sitting.

The conduct of the prisoners has been most satisfactory, the number punished still continues to decrease in a marked manner. The figures for the four complete years during which this has been a male convict prison are—

1891–2	-	36·36 per cent.
1892–3	-	30·12 „
1893–4	-	26·31 „
1894–5	-	17·39 „

One convict assaulted an officer, for which he was sentenced to corporal punishment.

The work of converting this prison into a female convict establishment, to replace Woking, is now drawing towards completion.

Notwithstanding the paucity of skilled convict labour, much progress has been made during the past year as the following summary will snow:—

Conversion of Female Wing into an Infirmary.—The hot and cold water supplies have been laid on.

Twelve new Baths.—These have been further proceeded with and will be finished in the course of a few weeks.

Separate Cells.—Gas and water have been provided.

Conversion of old Laundry into a Roman Catholic Chapel.—This has been finished with the exception of the altar.

Superior Officers' Quarters Nos. 1 and 2.—Extensive alterations have been made, and these quarters are now ready for paperhanging.

Governor's Quarters.—This house has been erected; it contains 21 rooms and cellarage. The work of fitting up is now proceeding. In all about seven-tenths done.

Storekeeper's Quarters.—A ten-roomed house has been built. About four-fifths done.

Warders' Quarters.—Five six-roomed houses have been erected and are nine-tenths done. Each of these will have an allotment attached.

D Hall.—The division and conversion of the debtors' wing into reception wards for male and female prisoners awaiting trial has been completed.

Workroom.—This building which measures 69 × 40 feet is now ready for fitting up with tables, benches, &c., when they can be spared from Woking.

Method of Lighting.—External gas boxes have been built to 25 per cent. of the cells which were still lit from inside. This work has therefore been finished.

Cell Tables.—81 of these have been made and 166 fixed in the cells.

Cell Ventilation.—New ventilators of an improved pattern have been inserted in 208 cells.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

Cell Shelves.—173 of the cells in A, B, and C halls have been fitted with three cast-iron shelves each, and the cells were afterwards rendered in concrete.

Mortuary.—This has been built at the rear of the infirmary.

Heating Apparatus.—A Keith's challenge boiler has been fixed in the basement of B hall, replacing a boiler of an obsolete pattern.

Old Exercise Yard.—The railings have been taken down and the ground levelled.

Officers' Infirmary.—This has been commenced. The late local prison infirmary for prisoners is being converted into accommodation for nurse and infirmary officer. Three wards will be provided for sick officers.

Service of the Prison.—The number of convicts employed upon this description of work, which comprises cooking, baking, washing, cleaning, mending clothing, repairing furniture, re-picking beds, &c., has again been limited as much as feasible, so that it should not interfere with the building operations.

The rules laid down for the government of convict prisons were observed in every instance, except in such cases as have been brought under the notice of a Director.

AYLESBURY PRISON.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

The usual daily prayers have been read on each week day morning.

Services with sermons have been held on each Sunday, also upon Good Friday and Christmas Day.

The conduct of the prisoners at all the services has been very good.

The attention throughout has been sustained, and the responses and singing heartily joined in.

The Chaplain in his cellular visits has met with encouragement from the hope that a few at least of the prisoners are sincere in their desire to lead a different life.

He has visited each prisoner upon reception and discharge, the sick also have been under his ministrations.

The Holy Communion has been administered three times during the year, the total number of the communicants being 18.

The schoolmaster has carefully performed his duties.

The appended statement will show the progress achieved by those attending school.

AYLESBURY PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

I have the honour to report that during the last year the health of the prisoners has been good, and that the prison has been free from contagious and infectious disease, with the exception of six cases of the epidemic influenza, which were of a mild type. The assistant surgeon in charge had an attack of epidemic influenza and laryngitis in February and March of this year.

Fourteen prisoners have been removed on medical recommendation as being unfit for the work here.

The food has been of good quality and generally sufficient, but it has been found necessary to allow 8 ozs. of extra bread per diem to an average of 15 to 20 prisoners.

Three warders were superannuated during the year.

There have been no deaths and no serious accidents on the works during the last year.

The ventilation of the cells has been improved by the introduction of the wainscot oak ventilators.

BORSTAL PRISON.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

The conduct of the officers has been very good.

The conduct of the prisoners with very few exceptions, has been exemplary.

War Department.—Fort Horsted.—Completed right front glacis; approach road to entrance; formation of parados over main postern; concrete revetment of escarp in right, left, and front ditches; also countescarp concrete revetment in left; front and left flank ditches; also same in half length of Right Gorge Ditch.

Fort Bridgewood.—Erected concrete revetment wall to escarpment in Gorge Ditch; wheeling out chalk from ditches, and depositing in formation on right front glacis; completed remodelling of the upper parapets.

Workshops.—General maintenance and repair of carriages, waggons, wheelbarrows, tools, &c.

Plantations.—Digging and forking round roots of young trees; burning weeds, &c.

Prison Buildings.—Kitchen building, bath house, offices and bachelors' quarters, B and C halls, painted, varnished; iron gates made and fixed to the covered way; clock tower repointed; and clock relettered; boundary wall part taken down, rebuilt, and repointed; also lime-washing and repairs to roof, floors, and cells.

Officers' Quarters.—Several repainted and bedrooms repapered; scullery sinks altered and ventilating pipes fixed; roofs repaired; washhouses and W.Cs lime washed; porches to entrance doors built.

Prison Farm.—Vegetable crops good, quality and quantity, especially onions. The wheat was above the average. The barley was very good as to bulk, but owing to the damage done by wind and rain it was of inferior quality and did not fetch as good a price as usual. The root crops were heavy, especially the mangel which averaged 38 tons per acre. Late potatoes good in quality and quantity.

The pigs sold fetched good prices.

A sow's first farrow of 10 all died, owing to entire absence of milk.

To the best of my belief all rules for government of prison have been complied with, and all cases where this has not been possible have been brought to Visiting Director's notice.

BORSTAL PRISON.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Divine service has been conducted in the chapel of this prison morning and afternoon on every Sunday throughout the year; and also on Christmas Day and Good Friday.

A service lasting ten minutes has been held in the chapel every morning in the week, throughout the year.

Holy Communion has been administered once a month. The average attendance has been nine.

Hospital.—Prayers have been read, and the patients visited individually every day throughout the year.

Separation cells.—I have visited these cells daily, and all prisoners under punishment have received advice.

General visitation.—Careful attention has been given by me to all applications made by prisoners.

Every prisoner is visited on reception and on discharge. I endeavour to visit all the prisoners individually two or three times in the twelve months, and although, in many cases, these visits are very short, they give to each prisoner an opportunity of entering into conversation on subjects about which he does not feel it necessary to make application for a special interview.

In addition to these visits I have always a certain number of cases which require frequent or special visitation.

Prisoners' library.—Owing to the steady efforts that have been made during the past two years the books are now well arranged and catalogued. In order to re-organise the educational, as well as the library books, I am, each year, applying for a certain number of new books, and by this means am enabled gradually to eliminate those which are out of date and obsolete.

School.—Prisoners unable to read and write have been under instruction as usual. During the 12 months 158 prisoners were received at this prison, and of these 21 needed to be taught in school; these men being unable to read an ordinary library book and write a letter. In addition to these we had already on the school list, from the previous year, 25 men, thus making a total of 46 prisoners instructed during the year.

Eleven of these men were under instruction during the whole year, and 15 for at least six months. The remaining 20 under instruction were either received too late in the year to be under instruction for six months, or they were discharged from prison before they had completed that term of instruction. To this report I append tables showing the progress made by the 11 and 15 prisoners respectively. It should be remembered, in comparing the tables of progress, that those prisoners who have been for twelve months, and in some cases for a very much longer time under instruction, are as a rule the least capable and intelligent of those with whom we have to do. In many instances I find it advisable to excuse men from school instruction if they are serving second, third, and sometimes fourth sentences of penal servitude, as I consider that, in such cases, they have in previous sentences received sufficient instruction, if they are capable of profiting by it.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

General remarks.—As the result of my work amongst the prisoners individually, I feel convinced that penal servitude provides very inadequately for the prevention of crime amongst habitual criminals.

Judges from time to time declare that they are at a loss to know what suitable sentence to pass upon men who return to crime after serving one or more sentences of penal servitude. I venture to think that penal servitude has no deterrent influence over habitual criminals. But, in some cases, the long series of imprisonments weakens in a very marked manner, their mental and moral powers. Statistics gathered from the records of 1890–3 (Table 4, page 15, Director's Report 1894, Part I.), show that during those four years, the number of convicts (males) reconvicted, is a third of the total number sentenced to penal servitude during that period. At the present time at this prison, the number of second, third, &c. sentences of penal servitude, as compared with the number of first sentences is also a third (84 out of a total of 257 prisoners).

On the supposition that about a third of the population of our convict prisons may be looked upon as consisting of habitual criminals; and that penal servitude has no deterrent effect upon this class of men, it may be advisable (for the sake of diminishing crime) to consider whether arrangements cannot be made for the stricter supervision of such criminals on their discharge from prison; and perhaps, special provision might be made for their employment when at liberty.

BORSTAL PRISON.

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

The general health of the prisoners has been, on the whole, good; their mental condition satisfactory. Imprisonment has not apparently had an injurious effect upon their "state of mind." They may be said to have been generally contented, and, as far as loss of liberty will allow, happy.

The means adopted to preserve cleanliness have been sufficient.

The statistics show that serious disease has been almost absent.

The number of patients admitted to hospital show an increase over that of the previous year, but this was almost entirely accounted for by the number of cases of chilblains, slight injuries, sprains, and contusions due to the severity of the winter. Considering the exceptional severity of the winter it must be remarked as satisfactory that no cases of serious illness occurred during that time.

The only case of zymotic disease among the prisoners was one of epidemic influenza in March of the current year.

Cod-liver oil has been administered to a few of the prisoners during the severe weather.

Extra bread has been issued to those prisoners who appear to require it from loss of weight or appearance of debility.

Among the officers and their families a few cases of epidemic influenza occurred. Two cases of scarlet fever, arising simultaneously in the same family in officers' quarters, occurred, undoubtedly introduced from without by one of the victims, who worked in the neighbouring city. These were all the cases of zymotic disease.

One officer died during the year; he was found dead beside his bed in the lodge at the prison gates; an inquest was held and death returned as due to syncope from disease of heart; no suggestion was entertained that death had been accelerated in any degree by his duties or from exposure.

The sanitary condition of the prison and of the officers' quarters has been satisfactory.

The periodical examinations of the drainage have shown a sufficient flush and a generally clean condition of the sewers and have not revealed any defects.

The water supply has been sufficient for every purpose.

The heating apparatus has been severely tested by the exceptional winter and has proved efficient.

The ventilation has been efficient.

The cooking, preparation, and quality of the food has been satisfactory.

No diseases have arisen which could be attributed to the existence of insanitary conditions.

DARTMOOR PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The conduct of the officers has been very good; I regret, however, that the services of two of them have been dispensed with on account of offences committed during the year.

The behaviour of the convicts has been highly satisfactory, and shows a marked improvement even on that of last year, for while the population has been higher by 19 the number of offences has been lower by 349, and not only so, the offences themselves have been milder in character; there were only three cases of corporal punishment as against eight, 180 cases of violence instead of 220, and 276 cases of idleness instead of 318.

With regard to the corporal punishment I am pleased to say that the three sentences inflicted were moderate, viz., six and 12 strokes with the cat and 12 strokes with the birch. During the last eight months of the year there was no flogging, and I hope this satisfactory condition of affairs will continue and that the occasions on which this form of punishment is necessary will, in the future, be few and far between.

None of the offences classed under the head of violence were serious, in fact nearly all of them were mere fights of a trivial character amongst the convicts themselves.

The very wet summer and long and severe winter, 10 consecutive weeks of frost, seriously interfered with operations in the building department and on the farm, consequently the record of work done does not compare favourably with that of the previous year so far as outside labour is concerned; on the other hand, the output in the manufacturing departments has increased, all contracts have been completed within the stipulated periods, and the manner in which the work has been turned out reflects credit on the warders superintending the various industries.

The following is a list of the bulk of the work done:—

For H.M. Dockyards.—1610 bags, coal; 5,817 bags, seamen's; 140 bags, torpedo; 7,012 hammocks; 7,130 sacks, coal.

For General Post Office.—202 labels, canvas; 158,325 lbs. twine.

For Office of Works—903 baskets. For Admiralty—6,115 baskets. For War Department—8,086 baskets. For Prison Dept.—586 baskets.

Uniform for Officers.—Boots, pairs, 2627; coats, great, 115; jackets, 352; straps, shoulder, 2,466; trousers, pairs, 636; tunics, 98; waistcoats, 3.

Liberty Clothing.—Boots, pairs, 135; coats, 324; trousers, 207; waistcoats, 244.

Prison Clothing.—Boots, pairs, 1,070; breeches, pairs, 875; caps, 1,028; drawers, flannel, pairs, 2,650; frocks, 881; gloves, pairs, 300; jackets, 420; leggings, pairs, 210; letters and numerals, 9,739; shirts, flannel, 2,060; shoes, pairs, 970; slippers, cloth, pairs, 70; slippers, hospital, pairs, 22; towels, 100; vests, 485.

Prison Bedding.—Cases, bed, 100; cases, pillow, 217; sheets, 443.

Greenwich School Uniform.—Caps, band, 110; coats, 6; drawers flannel, pairs, 1,000; great coats, 21; jackets, 120; trousers, pairs, 1,871; tunics, 201; waistcoats, 7.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

Articles cut out and sent to other prisons to be made up.—Caps, sailors', 2,100; frocks, 400; trousers, pairs, 700.

Carpentry, &c.—Candlesticks, 125; cans, water, 110; cups, tin, pint, 850; jumpers, 60; pails, wood, 87; tins, dinner, 550; key, safe, 1.

Building Department.—New bath house for 19 baths completed; warders' quarters, six quarters completed; Principal warders' quarters, 4 quarters commenced, walls averaging two feet above damp proof course.

No. 11 Block Barracks.—Reconstructed.

Infirmary.—Inprovements made in extraction of foul air from the association wards, and alteration made to the inspection of padded and observation cells.

New reservoir and filtering beds.—A storage tank for 96,000 gallons of filtered water built. Filtering beds in hand.

Workshops for tailors and shoemakers.—Improvements made in the lighting from roof, warming, and sanitary arrangements.

Gas Works.—A new gas holder fixed and a five-inch main laid on from works to central building of the prisons.

Storekeeper's Clerks' Office.—Boiler fixed and circulating pipes laid on for warming.

Governor's and Deputy Governor's Quarters.—Boiler fixed and circulating pipes laid on for warming.

Prison Boundary Wall.—Seventeen new buttresses built, and 164 lineal feet cement concrete coping laid on top of wall.

Prison Kitchen.—Excavations made and drains diverted for building a new larder.

Extension of Wash-house and new Passage to Chapel.—Completed.

Tar concrete paths laid from prison to schools, and also from the old cottages to the church; school yards partly paved.

Farm.—The work of reclaiming the land has not progressed so satisfactorily as in the previous year first on account of the very wet summer which necessitated the men being kept under cover, and secondly because the land under reclamation was exceptionally rocky, the bulk of the men were engaged jumping and removing stones, few only could be employed trenching. In all 243 convicts were daily employed in farming operations, 18 acres of land were reclaimed and 755 yards of wall built.

The crops of roots and cereals were under the average, but grass was abundant; hay, however, although a good crop, was more or less damaged, and there would have been considerable loss, had not a large quantity of the grass been put into silos. This turned out well and was of great service during the severe winter. Live stock sold well at the annual sale, the sheep making the highest price for the season, in this district.

Some of the best heifers have been selected for breeding and the dairy herd increased. Cart horses and ponies are kept up to the usual numbers and both horses and sheep have stood well at the local and county shows.

The market value of pigs has been very low during the year, and the receipts under this head show a decrease.

The number of live stock on the farm is as follows:—91 horses and ponies; 139 cattle; 516 sheep; 92 pigs; and 65 fowls.

The amount realised at the annual sale was 2,456*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.*

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

There has been little or no change in the various agencies employed to promote the moral welfare of the prisoners under my care. All the appointed religious services have been conducted as usual with benefit, I trust, to the majority of the men who have attended the same.

The hospitals are visited daily, a short service being held in each ward, and the patients are afterwards visited and conversed with.

Prisoners under punishment have also been regularly visited, and a daily service held in the Penal Class Prison.

The Holy Communion has been administered 15 times during the past year, the average attendance has been 26.

A preparatory class is always held during the previous week, and all communicants attend.

A Bible class was held during the winter evenings by the Scripture reader, the average attendance, which is voluntary, being 30.

The Bishop of Exeter held a confirmation in the prison chapel on 31st October 1894, when 22 candidates were presented. These men had been very carefully instructed as to the meaning and responsibilities of this solemn rite for three months previous to the confirmation, and their prison conduct has since been good.

The Bishop in his address to the prisoners was listened to with marked attention, and his visits to the prison invariably leave a favourable impression.

The number of prisoners received during the past year has been 475. The number discharged 506. Upon reception and discharge every prisoner is seen by the chaplain and advised as to his future.

I enclose statistics of education and the results of my half yearly examination.

Better results would follow if the time for attendance at school could be lengthened. I would venture also to repeat a former suggestion I have made, that the best time for teaching the uneducated prisoner is during the first nine months of his imprisonment when he is in separate confinement. I am the more convinced of this by carefully observing the progress made by such men who have been instructed here during the past year.

Our library consists of 4,790 volumes, and is much appreciated by the prisoners. Every facility is afforded for the supply of books, and as far as possible I think it well to encourage the prisoners to read.

In conclusion I must acknowledge the cordial assistance I have received from the governor in carrying out my duties, and the scripture reader and schoolmasters have ably seconded my efforts in the instruction of the prisoners.

DARTMOOR PRISON.

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

The sanitary condition of the prison and the health of the prisoners have been satisfactory.

Several of the new self-contained quarters erected during the past year have been occupied by members of the subordinate staff. This class of quarter is much appreciated by the officers, and it is, in addition, better adapted for the medical treatment of cases requiring isolation.

Fifty-eight officers were on the sick list during the year; eleven were invalided, and one died.

DOVER PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Extracts Governor's Report.

During the past year the conduct of the officers has been very good and the behaviour of the prisoners continued satisfactory.

Considering the wet season and the difficulty in harvesting the vegetables, the result of the work on garden ground has been very gratifying, the produce being as follows:—Potatoes, 23,074 lbs.; cabbage, 2,092 lbs.; carrots, 2,735 lbs.; turnips, 129 lbs.; onions 742 lbs.

The following articles were manufactured prior to the removal of prisoners in October 1894 who had been employed in the trades:—

For Admiralty.—Hammocks, 1,485; coal bags, 705; coal sacks, 1,770; seamen's bags, 200.

For General Post Office.—Mail bags, 439.

During the year the following work has been carried out:—

To prevent damp penetrating interior walls, the chimney stacks at Governor's house, offices, kitchen, laundry, infirmary, and second block of warders' quarters have been rendered in cement, and the front and back of Governor's house the outside of the prison gate, and north gable end of both blocks of warders' quarters have been painted.

A dry area has been built to external wall at prison gate.

On 14th November 1894 during a S.W. gale 121 feet of the north boundary wall was blown down and a hoarding was temporarily erected by prison labour for protection. This has since been replaced by a more substantial hoarding erected by the contractor.

One block of warders' quarters has been painted and papered throughout.

The prisoners have, besides, as usual, been employed in keeping in good order the buildings and grounds of the establishment and in the general service of the prison.

The last batch of prisoners was transferred on 30th January 1895, and since that date the officers remaining at this prison have been engaged in packing up for removal the furniture, &c., so that the buildings and offices will be left empty.

The rules for the government of the prison have been carried out except in such cases as have been specially brought to the notice of a Director.

DOVER PRISON.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

The conduct of the prisoners and their attention to religious instruction and to the other means taken for their moral and spiritu improvement has been, on the whole, remarkably good.

Exceptions, of course, occur, but such has been the rule. At divine service the heartiness of the responses and singing and the attention apparently given to the sermon are greater than would be found in the average of outside congregations.

The prisoners, when sick, and also at other times, welcome the ministrations of the chaplain and, from letters received from time to time after their release, appear to profit by them.

The Holy Communion has been administered four times with 38 communicants, making an average of 9·5

The average for the first three times was 11, the number being reduced upon the last occasion by the sending away of prisoners, either by discharge or transference. The percentage of communicants on the average prison population has been 34·7.

Satisfactory progress was made in school instruction during the earlier portion of the period of this report. At the later part the school proper was reduced to a minimum, and the time of the senior schoolmaster (the junior having been previously transferred to Stafford) was chiefly taken up in arranging a catalogue of the books for transfer to other prisons. The accompanying tabular statements will show the progress made by those under instruction.

Prisoners have been discharged through the Royal Society and through the St. Giles's Christian Mission up to the date of the closing of the prison, and, as far as information has reached me, with satisfactory results.

DOVER PRISON.

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

The amount of sickness amongst the prisoners has been exceptionally small, the position and sanitary condition of the prison and its general surroundings being strong factors in preventing the origin or spread of disease in any shape or form.

The health of the officers and their families generally has been good, with the exception of three officers who have been recommended for superannuation.

There have been no epidemic or contagious diseases amongst the officers or their families, notwithstanding the fact that influenza has been very prevalent in Dover during the early part of this year.

PARKHURST PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The conduct of the subordinate officers has been very satisfactory.

The conduct of the prisoners has been good; there have been but few serious offences.

There have been no escapes, nor attempts at escape.

The work carried on has been as follows:—

The earth closets within the prison have been done away with, and water-closets substituted; the old brick drains have been taken up, and replaced where needed with stoneware pipes, and defective drains have been relaid, and surface water drains diverted into the brook.

In the sewage works the filtering beds have been emptied, the materials cleaned and replaced.

In B. hall the heating apparatus boiler has been repaired and refixed, and the hot air chamber altered.

In the infirmary a new retort for heating water has been fixed, and the wards and cells have been painted and coloured.

In the separate cells iron shutters have been fitted to the windows, and electric bells have been fitted to these cells as also to those in the basement of C hall.

The pump house at the Lower Prison has been fitted up as a Jewish Synagogue.

At the entrance to the prison, new gates have been placed, and a new bell and turret fixed.

In the Prison Chapel, the internal walls have been plastered and decorated, and the wood work painted.

B hall parade has been tar-paved.

Gas Works. A new smoke shaft has been built; the wall at the west end of the retort house has been rebuilt, the furnaces relined, and the roof repaired.

The Upper Prison gate quarters have been painted and papered. In the infirmary block quarters the external wood work, &c. has been painted. In the warders' quarters the rooms have been coloured, the sculleries and out-houses have been limewashed, and sundry alterations made in the washhouses.

The storekeeper's quarters have been painted and papered throughout.

Assistant-surgeon's Quarters.—The garden walls at front and rear have been rebuilt; an additional watercloset fitted up; the yard repaved; hot water laid on to the first floor; the windows of the front bed-rooms enlarged; new gates fixed to the entrance; road and paths regravelled, and the house papered and painted internally and externally.

The officers' reading room has been repainted and papered.

The old farm quarters have been pulled down, and the wall of the medical officer's garden rebuilt.

Four gates have been made for entrances to quarters at Aylesbury Prison.

The usual clothing and bedding for prisoners and uniform for officers have been made.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The following work has been done for the Admiralty and Post Office: 2,600 sailors' caps, 700 coal sacks, 1,600 coal bags, 72 boarding bags, 5,850 seamens' bags, 5,059 boat fenders, 536 nets, 1,510 mail bags, and 890 mail bags for the Cape Town Post Office.

The usual work has been carried on on the farm; the crops generally were very good; the live stock on the farm consists of 3 horses, 20 cows, 1 heifer, 3 yearlings, 6 calves, 42 pigs.

I certify that the rules laid down for the government of the prison have been complied with in every instance except in such cases as have been distinctly reported to or brought under the notice of a Director.

PARKHURST PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Extracts, Chaplain Report.

During the year, with the exception of an outbreak of typhoid fever towards the close of last year, the chaplain's work has been much the same as in former years, the work varying but little from its ordinary routine, and yet never become really monotonous or uninteresting, for a prison in its nature is kaleidoscopic, that something occurs every day in prisoners coming from other prisons, going to liberty, or seeking interviews with the chaplain, &c. as to afford food for reflection and stimulus to work. During the past year many little things have occurred of a somewhat interesting character, here and there in the prison, indications that even the apparently most hardened are not impervious to the truth. Only a short time since a man sent for the chaplain to request the loan of a religious book, prefacing his request with, "You know I don't "care about religion, but I don't like to sit and listen to your preaching "and not understand something of the things you teach, and therefore "I should like to learn." A suitable book was given to him, and his conduct since has greatly improved. Another man sent for the chaplain a few days after Christmas day, telling the chaplain that his sermon on Christmas day afternoon had quite broken him down, and that strongly as the chaplain had spoken, it was a true picture of himself, he having been a cruel and brutal husband and father, and that he saw his whole life as he never had before seen it, and poured out his heart to God in prayer for grace and strength to begin altogether a new life. And one, writing some three days after his release, after thanking the chaplain for his attention to him, &c., says: "Cannot my late chaplain stroll so far as "Clifton during his holidays and give us the sermon I heard the last "Sabbath in prison—'My voice shalt thou hear in the morning.'" There is indeed not much in these and other instances that might be cited, but to the chaplain it is encouragement, and makes him feel the necessity of more grace to enable him faithfully to proclaim the gospel as the only means of salvation and the sure way of bringing about permanent reformation, and it may be added that religion in prison is not always, though too often, the farce it is believed to be, for a prisoner has less reason to sham than many of those who make a profession outside, and we might say even more to "put up with," for prisoners pretty freely express their opinions about each other and others; as a man said to me, "you spoke of prisoners making restitution, citing "Zacchæus as an example; some of the men laughed at the idea as "absurd; asking whether those who had made 'big hauls' could, even if they wished, make restitution?" The chaplain replied that there was no getting out of it, and that he had said as "far as lay in their power." This instances two things, that prisoners listen, and that they express their opinion to each other, however vigilantly they may be watched.

Some prisoners, aye, and old ones too, have a keen sense of right and wrong, and yet again and again they find their way into prison. They are like intemperate people in their sober moments who loathe themselves for becoming so degraded, and yet are so weak that they cannot resist temptation; sometimes not intending to do wrong, but seeing something valuable they immediately seek to secure it, it can hardly be called kleptomania for some kleptomaniacs are in other respects strong-minded and of high principle, but these men are weak all round, without stamina or moral fibre, and much, very much, to be pitied in consequence. The chaplain has knelt down with such on the eve of discharge, and with tears in their eyes they have thanked him and most solemnly resolved to lead honest lives, and yet come back again. What a blessing it would be if only such men could learn some useful trade in prison instead of only being able to handle the pickaxe or spade.

Prisoners often unburden their hearts at the discharge interview, and the real character is evidenced as it never was before; it is true indeed, that the majority do not express any sorrow for their crimes, averring as they do, that imprisonment more than wipes out the offence, so ignoring their moral guilt; but yet, all more or less do acknowledge, that in the long run crime does not pay, and that "honesty is the best policy."

During the year, for some months, the chapel was under repair, the whitewashed brick walls and dark-red dado, giving place to plastered and painted walls, all done most effectively by a prisoner, in which such a change has taken place as to make the chapel consistent with a building set apart for Divine Service. The services on the week-day morning meanwhile being suspended, though the Sunday services were carried on as usual, as they have been regularly throughout the year.

The Sacrament of the Holy Communion has been administered four times during the year in the chapel and twice in the infirmary wards, the chaplain personally visiting each communicant, and on the eve of celebration giving the communicants a short address.

Daily services have been held in the infirmaries by the chaplain and Scripture readers, as also on the Sundays by the schoolmasters; the patients being visited daily from bed to bed; those suffering from serious illness being especially attended to.

An attack of typhoid fever which broke out in the prison in November last (for which one part of the infirmary was especially set apart) was a time of some anxiety for all who had to do with the sufferers, as for some time it was doubtful as to how many might succumb to the disease, it being so insidious and relapses so often baffling the skill of the medical officers. The chaplain daily visited the sufferers, and found nearly all much subdued, not only by the depressing nature of the disease, but also by their feeling the need of the consolations of religion, and though the chaplain is sorry to say one or two who have recovered have relapsed into their old ways, the majority of those attacked, it is to be hoped, have received impressions of a more permanent character. Only one prisoner was removed by death, the rest lingering on for months, two of whom are still unfit to leave the infirmary. Certainly the attention and devotion to duty of the medical officers was noticeable in every respect, and the chaplain thinks that he may add a meed of praise to the convict nurse who was most assiduous in his attentions, night and day, to the sick.

The infirmary has nearly doubled the number of its patients during the year so that at the present time 118 patients are in the hospital wards, many of whom are afflicted with chronic disorders, and are therefore, especially in the winter months, seldom out of the hospital. The severe winter we have lately passed through has, of course, had much to do with the increase of sick—the which has brought many under the chaplain's care who under ordinary circumstances would not be so frequently visited by him.

Fifteen deaths have taken place during the year, three of whom died suddenly, some after very long illnesses—one from typhoid fever, and the rest from illness more or less protracted and as, with the exception of two out of the three—all were visited systematically during their sickness, the chaplain can only express the hope that his ministrations were productive of real good to their souls.

During the year the chaplain has endeavoured to make a systematic visitation of the prisoners by going through their names alphabetically, and on the whole the result has been most encouraging to him. The number of visits paid by the chaplain, including visits to applicants, prisoners for discharge, and prisoners sent from other prisons &c., amounts to about 1,200—which with visits to infirmary patients, on the average 35 a day for five days in the week—make a total of 9,600 visits paid by the chaplain. The scripture reader also efficiently performing his duty in this respect.

When occupied the chaplain has constantly visited the officers' infirmary and at times held a short service with the inmates. One officer died suddenly in the infirmary after a few hours' illness, and another very suddenly at his home. in both cases the chaplain is sorry to say the widows were left totally unprovided for.

The chaplain and his wife have from time to time visited the officers' families in their homes and have always found such visits appreciated by those visited.

During the winter, for six months in the year, the chaplain has conducted a service in the recreation room on Sunday evening, and to many such a service on the dark winter evenings has been found a great convenience. The attendance on the whole has been good.

The Sunday school under the superintendence of the chaplain's wife has been well attended by the officers' children—as also the Band of Hope conducted by the chaplain.

The Penny Bank has been open weekly at the chaplain's house, upwards of 90*l.* having been deposited by the officers' children during the year.

The schools for prisoners have been carried on as usual during the last 12 months, the percentage of attendance being rather higher than that of the preceding year. Last year the prison population averaged 520—attending school 128, or 25 per cent.

This year the average number of prisoners was 690—attending school 178, or 26 per cent. The appended tables testify to the progress made by some of those attending the school.

The prison library, consisting of 2,500 volumes, is highly appreciated by the prisoners, great care being taken in making out the annual demand to obtain books suitable for them, books of a high class are constantly in request. French books are much asked for, while Cassell's Popular Educator and books of a similar character have seldom been allowed to remain long on the shelves of the library, some men indeed will only read books of a thoughtful character, and ask that only such may be left in their cells, certainly the library is one of the great ameliorating influences of the prison.

In conclusion the chaplain would say, that his staff have efficiently discharged their several duties during the year, and have always shown themselves willing to meet the chaplain's wishes. The office duties of the Scripture reader and schoolmaster have considerably increased during the last few months, on account of letters being allowed in lieu of visits, and petitions being written more frequently, and so many more sick requiring their letters written for them, also an average of 170 men more than in the preceding year. The scripture reader has ably seconded the chaplain in his duties, and also conducted the music in the chapel.

PARKHURST PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

Two hundred and sixty-one prisoners were received during the year from various prisons, and of these only thirty-six were sound in mind and body; these being principally Jews who were sent here owing to this fact—the Jewish prisoners now being located here. Several cases were almost bedridden from various diseases, numbers were old men, decrepid and broken down in health, as a consequence there has been a large daily average under treatment in hospital, viz., 77·1, and a large number under treatment out of hospital, viz., 1,041. The mention of these figures suffices to prove that the duties of the medical staff have been arduous throughout the year, indeed at times it has been almost more heavy than could be satisfactorily accomplished. It is becoming a pressing question if it will not be necessary to increase the present staff.

The hospital accommodation has not been adequate for all the patients to be in the hospital, ordinary prison cells in one of the prison halls having to be occupied by the sick, as far as possible those treated in this way have been those with the slighter ailments, but the practice is unsatisfactory for the patient and also from an administrative point of view. The nursing is carried on under difficulties, &c.; and the proposed extension of the present hospital building is most urgently needed.

Considering the large number of invalids the number of deaths has been small, viz., 15; three of these were of a sudden character, G.P. 92, E.L.S. 1,228, and P. 303, all these being cases of heart disease. The sudden death of a prisoner, indeed the death at all of one, seems to some people to be a thing that should not occur and to suggest that there has been want of care, skill, and attention on the part of the medical staff, and even to more reasonable people three deaths of a sudden character in one year in a population between six and seven hundred appears large, but when it is taken into consideration that out of this number of people there are some eighty known to have some cardiac affection, the surprise is rather that there should not be more cases.

In reviewing the cause of the other deaths it is remarkable to notice the rarity of tubercular affection, indeed not one from pulmonary phthisis. This is to some extent a coincidence, as in the year previous there were four due to this cause. At the same time I think it is partially due to the care, treatment, and nursing, together with good general hygienic surroundings such cases meet with in a prison. It is surprising how long many advanced cases of consumption linger on, sometimes apparently almost at the point of death, then rallying again in a most extraordinary manner. Such cases often give much anxiety to the medical staff, ever to be on the alert for dangerous symptoms in order to give opportunity for the prisoner to see his relations, &c., or with regard to a recommendation as to liberation on medical grounds and, on the other hand, to obviate the relaxation of discipline to too great an extent.

Seven cases of insanity have been removed to lunatic asylums, two only of these were described as of sound mind when received here, viz., O. 63 and H. 121.

O. 63 undergoing 10 years penal servitude for carnally knowing a girl, suffered from a chronic form of disease of the heart, was a well-behaved young prisoner and suddenly, without any apparent cause, developed acute mania; the more acute symptoms passed off and I was in hopes he would have recovered altogether, but after a time it was considered better to remove him to an asylum, where probably, I think, he would, eventually regain his mental faculties.

H. 121, a native of Antigua, undergoing 20 years penal servitude for manslaughter, was for a long time very eccentric in his behaviour and for some years had been classified as of "weak mind" in order that certain latitude of the discipline might be exercised, gradually deteriorated into chronic mania, although considered as sane when he committed his crime and for some years after, yet I should doubt whether the onset of his insanity can be actually regarded as arising in prison.

Mental affections other than insanity.—The number of such remains much the same. Six have been liberated during the year either on license or on the expiration of their sentence. Endeavours have been made in each case to communicate with their friends or to any aid society they may have joined, with regard to their mental condition, in order that they might have some guiding hand, if possible, to prevent their relapsing into crime owing to their mental condition, and where there have been no friends nor aid society available, the police have been informed and asked to give assistance as far as practicable.

The cases under hospital treatment during the year have been of the usual character, with the exception of there having been 19 cases of enteric fever and some 40 of influenza. Commenting on the latter first, it is sufficient to note that there was a recrudescence of this complaint early in 1895 simultaneous with that which generally prevailed in this country, desultory cases seem to occur off and on also for some five years; however, no case was fatal during the past year

The epidemic of enteric fever took place at the latter end of October and during November. The disease was prevalent in Newport, and when one or two cases occurred in the families of some of the warders, I recommended that the milk supplied from the contractor should be boiled before being issued, when a little later the illness of a prisoner was found to be due to this disease, and others of a suspicious character, all the water and milk used in the prison was boiled. Subsequent events proved that the source of the contagion was due to contamination of the water, by sewage, of one of the Carisbrooke wells.

There were in all 19 prisoners attacked, many were of a severe character, happily only one was fatal.

One officer only was attacked, but 28 cases occurred amongst their families, chiefly in those living out of prison quarters, viz., eight cases in quarters and 20 out of quarters; four cases terminated fatally.

Taking the population occupying the prison and the prison quarters as 1,131, and the total number of cases being 27, the ratio per 1,000 would be 24, a much lower ratio than that in the borough of Newport, which, I believe, was 41·5 per 1,000. This I attribute to the following causes, viz.:—

Extracts, Medical Officer's Report.

1. Age of population.—Only 187 being under 15 years of age, a lower figure than must be the case in Newport.
2. To the early and vigorous boiling of water and milk, and seeing that this was satisfactorily carried out daily.
3. To good general hygienic arrangements.

Fifty-three officers have been on the sick list during the year; of these nine were reported as unfit for further service, all after long service; two officers died, one from heart disease and the other from aneurism of the aorta.

PORTLAND PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The conduct of the officers has been good, and they have displayed considerable tact and judgment in dealing with the prisoners engaged in the varied work carried out at this station. The wide range of employment and the great diversity of skilled labour at a large prison afford great opportunities for the training of both warders and prisoners. The same facilities could not be given on a small scale, as the occupation of the men must, of necessity, be confined to one or two handicrafts, and they have not the same means of gaining a general insight into the ordinary routine of a working man's life

The behaviour of the prisoners has been good on the whole, and very few serious offences have been recorded.

As in former years the men of the "Star Class" have been conspicuous in the matter of good conduct.

They start with a perfectly different view of their sentence from the ordinary run of criminals, their object being to shorten the sentence by every legitimate means, and to avoid any return to their former misconduct.

The reconstruction of the prison buildings, in stone, has been commenced; one wing has been removed, and a new approach for the transport of material has been formed on the northern boundary.

The work carried out has been as follows, viz. :—

For the Admiralty.—Roach, Whitbed, Kerf, and Base-bed stone has been quarried, as shown below :—Scappled block, 4,919 tons; random block, 6,958 tons; hard cap block, 15,136 tons; spawls, 8,444 tons; broken stone, 2,276 tons; rubble, 18,184 tons; flint, 112 tons; burr, 640 tons; railway blocks, 3,108 tons ; picked face with tooled margin, 7,487 feet super; half plain work on beds, 19,005 feet super; dressed ashlar, 1,948 cubic feet.

The riggers and platelayers have shifted and erected cranes, made new railroads, and kept them in repair.

The work for Keyham Tower is completed.

Stonework has been prepared for the various coast guard stations, also for a new mortuary, laundry, and boundary wall at the Naval Hospital. Large quantities of ashlar, channelling, paving, pier stones, coping, curbs, and troughs have been prepared for the breakwater, also stone for the new docks at Portsmouth.

Smiths' Shop.—Castings, forgings, and fittings for a 12-ton crane have been prepared, and for two 6 ton cranes. Castings, forgings, and fittings for new pistons and rods for cylinders and pumps have been made for Chene pumping station, also pins, keys, cotters, straps, brasses, &c. Cast-iron cover plates and frames, hinges and fittings for gates have been made; and water service laid on to mortuary and laundry at the Naval Hospital, also iron cover plates and frames, brass fittings &c. for new hospital huts.

New break gear, steel sheet framing and fittings have been made for the locomotive on the breakwater.

A new cast-iron foot bridge has been made for Kimmeridge Coast Station.

New manhole covers and frames have been made for Portland Coast Guard Station, and batten hooks for Bottom Coast Guard Station.

Bolts and straps for the outfall from Naval Slaughter House to the sea have been made, also new gear to trolleys and waggons in the quarries.

New cocks, valves, glands, &c. for machinery at breakwater have been made, and for shops at the quarries.

The locomotive hauling stone from the quarries has been kept in good repair.

The plant, machinery, and tools have been maintained in good order.

Carpenters' Shop.—A new post-mortem table, bier and trestles, tables, &c. have been made for the mortuary at the Naval Hospitals at Portland and Pembroke. The mast and jib for one 12-ton crane and two 6-ton cranes have been prepared and fitted, also 28 stone trolleys, 18 waggons, and two pairs of boundary gates made for the quarries.

A new arm stand for Abbotsbury Coast Guard Station has been made.

The dining tables, shelves, troughs, letter-box, coal bunkers, &c. have been made for the Naval Hospital huts.

The tools and plant have been maintained in good order.

The butts and firing points at Breakwater rifle range have been reconstructed, and the slopes trimmed by the foreshore.

Surface drains have been made and new paving laid at the Naval Hospital.

Also a new tennis court has been made on the slope at the rear of the hospital.

For the War Department.—Smiths' Shop.—Ventilator gratings, frames, and doors for main reservoir, guard railing on parapet over main entrance, and ventilators for buildings have been prepared, and the plant, tools, and sundry articles kept in serviceable repair.

Carpenters' Shop.—Benches, drawers, shelves, cupboards, &c., for the High Angle Battery have been made, also for the cook house.

The armourer's shop, stone sheds, and workshop roofs have been refelted.

The excavators have built dry retaining wall at main entrance, and examined the gas and water mains.

The parades have been re-metalled and rolled. The drawbridges have been kept in good order, and the incidental repairs within the citadel.

For the Prison Department.—The new foundry, additional sheds, underground tanks, stone sheds, limekiln, underground stores, new washhouses (back of C quarters), have been completed.

Sixteen new quarters have been built and occupied. Eight more are fast approaching completion. Six more are two-thirds done, and two in course of construction.

The boundary wall around the quarters is half done.

The roads, footpaths, kerbing, and channelling for the new quarters are completed to the third row of quarters.

Salt and fresh water mains have been laid to the quarters.

The hollow by the old limekiln has been filled in and levelled.

The reservoirs at Folly pier have been kept in good order, also the filter beds and machinery.

The supply pipes from King's Pier have been repaired where broken by frost.

E hall has been razed to the ground, the site cleared, and the reconstruction is now in hand. Further, an entrance is being made through the boundary wall, near the penal cells, to facilitate the transport of stone from the West Quarries to the site of the new hall for the reconstruction of prison buildings.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The interior painting of C hall has been completed, and the reconstruction of the chief warder's, compounder's, and schoolmaster's drainage.

The tools, plant, and machinery have been maintained in good order.

Manufacturing Department.—Dressed stone has been prepared and forwarded to the following prisons, viz.:—Canterbury, Newgate, Holloway, and Wandsworth.

Stone in block has been supplied to Aylesbury, Dartmoor, and Parkhurst Prisons.

The whole of the prison clothing, bedding, and furniture has been kept in repair, and the following are some of the new articles made for this and other prisons: 1,357 breeches, 2,506 flannel drawers, 948 frocks, 212 liberty suits, 100 sheets, 2,505 flannel shirts, 160 cotton shirts, 844 towels, 470 waistcoats, 1,103 pairs of boots, 324 pairs of shoes, 566 hammock straps, 46 iron bedsteads, 167 cans, 1,500 zinc jugs, 155 dust pails, 1,170 tin pint cups, 5,113 dinner tins, and 16 dust tubs.

Extracts, Governor's Report.

The following articles of officers' uniform clothing have been made for Aylesbury, Portland, and Stirling Prisons: 75 great coats, 62 tunics, 262 jackets, and 497 trousers.

For public departments, the articles manufactured were as under:—Admiralty 79 signal cones, 17,000 hammocks, 11,358 canisters, and 27,825 handstones; Board of Trade, 12 tin trays; India Office Department, 547 handstones; Office of Works, 972 tin trays; Post Office, 1,000 mail bags and 10,000 tin saucers; War Department, 9,389 tin oil bottles.

Vegetables were cultivated on 12 acres of land for the use of the prison and sale to officers. The crops were fairly good, but the severe and continued frost early this year almost entirely destroyed what was standing in the ground.

The rules have, in all cases, been complied with to the best of my belief, except in such cases as have been brought to the notice of the Director.

PORTLAND PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

There has been no deviation from the regular routine of daily services in the chapel and infirmary.

The sick have been individually visited, encouraged, and advised, and I have specially ministered to those who were seriously ill.

The Holy Communion was administered six times during the year, at which there was an average attendance of 65.

The Communicants are chiefly drawn from the "Star Class" convicts, who much more readily respond to all efforts made for their moral and spiritual welfare than do those who belong to the habitual criminal class.

There were 1,818 applications to see the chaplain, of which number 1,091 were respecting books, letters, and petitions, 436 for permission to receive the Holy Communion, 27 for admission to the choir, 225 for advice, and 29 for various unimportant matters.

Besides these visits made by the chaplain to applicants, spontaneous visits were made by me to every man in the prison, and in addition each convict was visited soon after his reception here, and also shortly before his discharge.

The library, owing to the annual supply of new books, is well stocked with useful and interesting literature, which is highly appreciated.

It would be impossible to exaggerate the importance of the library as an auxiliary to the chaplain in his work amongst the convicts.

They are allowed to apply for any book, a privilege which nearly all the men avail themselves of.

There were 20,904 applications for particular books, 15,803 of which were supplied during the year.

Of the 381 petitions I have summarised, 66 of them pleaded innocence, 40 severity of sentence, 24 drink, 18 false evidence, and 230 various other pleas.

I am glad to bear testimony to the work of the societies for the aid of discharged prisoners, and I would especially speak of the valuable assistance frequently given to the wives and children of convicts.

The enclosed educational statistics show the progress made by convicts who have attended school.

It does seem disappointing that although compulsory education has been in force for 25 years we had nearly 250 convicts of a population under 1,100, so ignorant as to require the most elementary instruction.

PORTLAND PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

Extracts Medical Officer's Report.

During the past year 456 prisoners have been received. Of these 328 were found fit for No. 1 ordinary labour, 78 for second class work, and 48 for light labour only. Two prisoners were admitted to the infirmary, on reception, as unfit for any work at the time.

377 prisoners were discharged during the year. Of these, 184 gained an average weight of 3 lbs., while 193 lost correspondingly 3 lbs., during imprisonment.

There have been 676 hospital admissions, including 133 for "debility." In these cases, a uniform dietary was employed, consisting of a full infirmary diet, with a pint of beef tea, and an extra 8-oz. loaf daily. The result of this form of treatment, adopted in all the debility cases, was an average gain in weight of 6 lbs., in five days.

The chief cause of increase in the infirmary admissions this year is the very severe weather prevailing since Christmas. The number of bad chilblains and frost bites is 61, against 12 in the previous year. There has also been an increase in diseases of the respiratory system owing to the same cause—showing 55 hospital cases against 16 last year.

The prison has been remarkably free from disease of a zymotic character.

One of the sources of supply of water used for potable purposes had to be discontinued in consequence of it having been found to contain bacteria in too large a proportion for safety. The conditions of the water supply generally are under consideration.

EXTRACTS FROM THE GOVERNOR'S REPORT.

The conduct of the officers has been satisfactory.

Prisoners.—There was one assault, not of a serious nature. Of the 35 liberated, 5 were taught trades.

The conduct of the prisoners has been satisfactory.

Employment of Prisoners.—Manufacturing Department.—The necessary repairs were made to prison clothing, bedding, &c., for the service of the prison.

Prison Work.—The prisoners have been employed in making the few necessary repairs to officers' quarters and prison buildings; also in removing the fittings from the prison buildings, most of which have been sent to other prisons to be utilised.

Admiralty work.—The prisoners have been employed on the completion of the new boat-house.

The rules as laid down for the government of the prison have, to the best of my belief, been complied with in every instance, excepting in such cases as may have been brought to your notice.

PORTSMOUTH PRISON.

Extracts. Chaplain's Report.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

In forwarding the present brief report of matters which have taken place since sending in the last annual one, I have but little to add.

The prison has been in a state of change for some little time previous to this its final closing, as batches of prisoners have been constantly dispatched to other prisons, but up to the last all duties have, as far as circumstances would permit, been carried on in the usual way. Sunday services and daily prayers have been regularly held, library books have been changed periodically, and prisoners' letters, outgoing and incoming, read and forwarded.

The schools have naturally been much interfered with owing to the frequent removal of prisoners elsewhere. Latterly, out of the few men that have remained, there have been none requiring to attend school, but all have been furnished with educational books in their cells that they might have the opportunity of continuing to improve themselves did they so desire.

Every man on discharge has been carefully counselled and advised, prior to his actual departure, and been provided with a Bible, prayer, and hymn book whenever I had fair reason for supposing they would be valued and used.

EXTRACTS FROM THE MEDICAL OFFICER'S REPORT.

Extracts Medical Officer's Report.

I beg to submit the medical statistics for the period from 1st April till 31st July 1894.

On these statistics I have no comment to offer, but I may report that during the above-mentioned period 12 officers have been certified physically unfit for further service.

WOKING PRISON.

Extracts from the Report of the Governor and Medical Officer.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR AND MEDICAL OFFICER.

The conduct of the subordinate officers has been uniformly good.

The conduct of the prisoners has shown a decided improvement over that of the preceding year, and their industry has been at least as great.

No prisoner has escaped or attempted to escape during the period under report.

The service of the establishment, such as cooking, baking, cleaning, has been satisfactorily performed.

The twine-spinning industry has again showed an increased output; this year 38,160 lbs. have been manufactured, a quantity which compares favourably with the 28,228 lbs. made in the previous financial year.

A small quantity of Greenwich Hospital School clothing has been made, the actual quantities being:—Flannel drawers, 384 pairs; serge frocks, 792; trowsers, 1,279 pairs.

This branch of the manufactory has been discontinued, as, owing to the present short sentences, it was found to be impossible to teach the majority of the women to become sufficiently expert to turn out this class of work satisfactorily.

2,569 Hessian bags were made for the Post Office.

In addition to the above, a large quantity of liberty clothing was made for both male and female convicts on their release. 1,203 pairs of socks, 2,042 pairs of stockings, 1,624 pairs of men's flannel drawers, 1,734 flannel shirts, and 1,691 cotton shirts.

7,144 cotton shirts were made for the use of male convicts whilst serving sentences, and 725 capes to be worn whilst at exercise during inclement weather.

All the uniforms required for the female officers of this prison were made here, and also all the clothing required by the inmates whilst serving their sentences, and that which was given to those who were released.

In consequence of the severe frost which occurred in February and March last the water pipes suffered considerable damage, but this has been repaired, and the inhabited portion of the prison buildings and the occupied quarters are at present in fairly good condition.

The sanitary state of the prison and the health of the prisoners generally have been good.

There have been five deaths during the year, but in no case was the disease in any way the result or outcome of imprisonment. One prisoner had been nearly 30 years in prison, and died at the age of 74 years.

The prison has again this spring been visited by an epidemic of influenza. The disorder appears to be milder in character and freer from complications than in former years, for although (up to March 31)

Extracts from the Report of the Governor and Medical Officer.

93 cases have occurred, in 12 instances only was it found necessary to admit the prisoners to the infirmary, and there have been no deaths.

Seventeen female officers have been on the sick list (four with influenza) during the year; five female officers were invalided, and one retired from the service on the grounds of age.

Five male officers have been on the sick list during the year, three of whom suffered from influenza; one male officer was invalided, and two retired from the service in consequence of age.

I hereby certify that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the rules laid down for the government of the prison have been complied with in every instance, except in such cases as have been distinctly reported to or brought under the notice of a Director.

WOKING PRISON.

EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPLAIN'S REPORT.

Extracts, Chaplain's Report.

With regard to the religious and moral condition of the prisoners committed to my spiritual charge, I am happy to be able to speak as hopefully as in former years. I am inclined to believe that there is, amongst the majority of our prisoners, a better tone and a more genuine desire to reform their lives.

Their letters to relatives and friends decidedly display an earnest wish to abandon their former vicious course of life, and to become honest and respectable members of society, so far as their antecedents will permit. Many are very anxious to emigrate, so as to get away from former evil associations and to begin life anew. In some cases, those who have gone abroad have afforded the most satisfactory evidences of a reformed life, and are now doing well; often times, expressing a desire to assist their former fellow prisoners to obtain a similar position in foreign lands.

The women in the "Star Class" continue to be kept distinctly apart from the main body of the "habitual criminal class" of prisoners, a very wise arrangement and one that I urgently recommended many years ago.

They are frequently seen and exhorted by myself and the lady Scripture reader; and every facility is afforded them for the cultivation of their intellectual and moral faculties. Generally speaking, they are attentive and thankful for advice, and during the first stages of their sentence are susceptible of good impressions.

The regular and appointed services of our Church have been held on Sundays and week-days during the year, and I would add, have been attended by the prisoners with a decorous, thoughtful, and attentive spirit, productive, I trust, of a good influence on their daily life and conversation. The Holy Communion was administered on the first Sunday in each month. The number attending is 25.

The hospital wards have been visited daily by myself and Scripture reader and short services with exposition of scripture held in same. All cases reported "seriously ill" had special attention.

The number of deaths during the year has been five of which four were Protestants.

All prisoners on reception and prior to discharge were seen and admonished.

The punishment cells have been visited daily, and I am pleased to add, that the punishments inflicted have been less than in former years.

In June 1894 I examined 110 prisoners in reading, writing, and arithmetic and again in December 110. Judging from the results of these examinations, I am convinced that very fair progress has been made in all subjects. During the year 39 prisoners were discharged from school, as being sufficiently educated in reading, writing, and arithmetic.

I find an increasing desire among many of the younger women to read with greater intelligence, and some of our historical and biographical works are sought after with much earnestness.

Between the first of April 1894 and the 31st of March 1895, the number of prisoners' letters and petitions which passed through the chaplain's office and which were summarized and read, were as follows—

REPORT

DISCIPLINE AND MANAGEMENT OF MILITARY PRISONS,

1894.

By MAJOR-GEN. SIR EDMUND F. DU CANE, K.C.B.,

Inspector General of Military Prisons, &c.

Presented to both Houses of Parliament by Command of Her Majesty.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR WAR, &c.

Home Office, Whitehall,
March 1895.

SIR,

I HAVE the honour to submit my annual Report for 1894 on the Military Prisons.

2. The prisons for military offenders in Great Britain and Ireland during the year 1894 were as follows:—

* Punishment cells and infirmary accommodation excluded.

† This prison also receives men sentenced by Naval Courts-martial.

4. The new Military Prison at Wynberg, (South Africa), containing 31 cells, was completed during the year under report. This prison was built to supersede the old and unsuitable establishment at Cape Town, whence the inmates were removed on the 22nd of October last. The Chief Warder in charge reports that the buildings are substantial and well ventilated and that the sanitary arrangements are, so far, very good. Also that the warders are comfortably housed in their new quarters.

5. In previous Reports I have referred to the Military Prison at Port Louis, Mauritius, which is reported to suffer under various important sanitary defects, especially in the officers' quarters. The subject is still under consideration.

6. In his report the chief warder in charge at Halifax (N.S.) refers to the deficiency in the provision for separate confinement of the prisoners, and the unsatisfactory results which this has produced. I understand that the various points referred to are now being dealt with.

7. The following Table shows the distribution in prisons of various kinds of the soldiers sentenced by Military Courts or Civil power :—

NOTE.—In June 1887 the Jubilee amnesty caused a large number of releases. See also paragraph 12.

As will be observed, a diminution took place in the number of soldiers in military and civil prisons between 1886 and 1890, their number having gradually fallen from 2,300 to 1,287. In 1891, however, an inconsiderable increase occurred, bringing the number up to 1,389 ; and in 1893 the number had further increased to 1,704. Since then, however, there has been a substantial decrease, the number on 31st December 1894 standing at 1,474.

8. The daily average population of the military prisons at home (including the soldier population in Bodmin Naval Prison) and abroad in each of the years 1884—1894 was as follows :—

	At Home.	Abroad.
1884	1,159	328
1885	1,207	332
1886	1,184	321
1887	865	228

	At Home.	Abroad.
1888	807	226
1889	548	236
1890	436	255
1891	447	230
1892	535	238
1893	689	230
1894	608	251

9. The number of soldiers in Convict Prisons in England and Wales under sentence of penal servitude by courts-martial has decreased from 361 in 1883 to 38 on 31st December 1894.

10. The number of men discharged from the Army for bad conduct in each year since 1868 is as under:—

In 1869	2,470	In 1882	1,294
„ 1870	1,616	„ 1883	1,059
„ 1871	1,032	„ 1884	940
„ 1872	1,694	„ 1885	1,008
„ 1873	2,065	„ 1886	1,332
„ 1874	1,648	„ 1887	1,854
„ 1875	1,667	„ 1888	2,020
„ 1876	1,682	„ 1889	1,624
„ 1877	2,003	„ 1890	1,603
„ 1878	1,811	„ 1891	1,590
„ 1879	2,091	„ 1892	1,902
„ 1880	1,826	„ 1893	2,018
„ 1881	1,518	„ 1894	1,792

11. The number of prisoners received under sentence of courts-martial decreased in 1894 as compared with the preceding year, and was nearly the same as in 1892, as is shown by the following figures:—

	Average Strength of Army.		Number of Prisoners committed to Military Prisons at Home and Abroad by
			Commanding Officers.	Court-martial.			Total.
	At Home.	Abroad.		Over 84 Days.	84 Days and under.	Total.
1886	94,060	101,845	2,950	2,395	3,836	6,231	9,181
1887	102,560	99,061	2,701	1,906	2,520	4,426	7,127
1888	102,688	100,413	2,622	1,617	2,417	4,034	6,656
1889	101,498	100,486	2,940	1,052	2,268	3,320	6,260
1890	101,211	99,654	3,104	940	2,509	3,449	6,553
1891	100,417	100,836	2,841	1,037	2,443	3,480	6,321
1892	101,655	107,425	3,179	1,122	2,918	4,040	7,219
1893	101,641	107,112	3,806	1,481	3,033	4,514	8,320
1894	101,241		3,369	1,392	2,652	4,044	7,413

It will be noticed that up till 1892 the increase had been almost entirely in the shorter sentences; but that in the year 1893 a considerable increase took place in the longer sentences by courts-martial. The number sentenced by Commanding Officers also continued to increase. The total number of committals in 1893 was thus higher than in any year since 1886. The figures for the year under report show a considerable decrease (907) in the total committals. For these the shorter sentences chiefly account, the longer sentences by courts-martial only showing a decrease of 89.

12. As mentioned in my previous Reports, the general diminution in the number of committals to military prisons by courts-martial up to the year 1891 was, no doubt, due partly to the General Order issued in January 1887, under which Commanding Officers were permitted to deal with many offences formerly sent before courts-martial, and partly to the Order given in October 1888, together with the amendment in 1889 of the Army Act, Section 4, under which men sentenced to be discharged with ignominy, are to be committed to civil prisons, as guilty of disgraceful crimes under Section 135 of the Army Act, 1881. The effect of the latter measure is shown by the increase in the number under sentence of imprisonment in civil prisons at home, which was 194 at the end of 1888, and 438 at the end of 1894, having been as high as 544 at the end of 1893.

13. The total number of prisoners in provost prisons at the end of 1894 was 254, which is 33 less than at the end of 1887.

14. As I have previously observed, the greater part of the military crime is committed by soldiers in the early years of their service. The returns of the past year show that nearly half of the men committed to military prisons had not more than two years' service, whereas only a little over one-fourth of the men in the Army were in this period of service. As the number of men in the early period of their service had much increased from 1889 onwards, it was reasonable to expect that an increase of military offences would occur, as was actually the case in the succeeding years.

15. The Governor of Gosport Prison in his Annual Report draws attention to the marked increase in the number of Army Reserve men who have fraudulently re-enlisted. He also observes that a considerable number of men who recently enlisted were found on admission to prison to be physically unfit for even a moderate task of hard labour. This condition being, he says, in many cases attributed to a weak state of the heart.

16. The reports show that the conduct of the prisoners has on the whole been good and that discipline has been generally well maintained.

17. The Chief Warder in charge of Gibraltar Prison observes in his annual report that, "on looking into the ages of those "prisoners who have been recorded for breaches of prison "discipline, it is found that a large majority are under 20 "years of age and have less than one year's service. The "breaches of prison discipline have, however, been of a very "simple nature such as may be expected from the young and "inexperienced soldier, and, when met by kindly admonition "and pointing out their error, a repetition of the offence has "rarely occurred."

18. Out of 499 soldiers in military prisons in the United Kingdom who, during the year 1894, were, on the expiration of their sentences, discharged the Army, only 16 have taken advantage of the facilities for providing employment offered by the Discharged Prisoners' Aid Societies as referred to in my Report for 1884. Very few have gone to the local societies, 14 out of the 16 having sought the help of the Royal Society for the Aid of Discharged Prisoners, 39, Charing Cross.

19. The employment of military prisoners on industrial work for the War Department, which was initiated in 1887, has been carried out with the following results which show a steady progress in this direction:—

Prison.	Articles made, 1894.
	Paillasse Cases.	Barrack Beds, New Pattern.	Barrack Bolsters.
Aldershot - -	—	1,680	—
Brixton - - -	3,577	—	—

Dublin - - -	3,381	—	—
Stirling - - - -	3,500	—	—
	26,218	2,634	1,500

The advantages resulting from employment which exercises a man's intelligence and enables him to acquire some amount of dexterity is now fully recognized as a beneficial element in the treatment of a prisoner, and such occupation must add to his handiness and usefulness when he returns to his regimental duties.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient, humble servant,

E. F. Du Cane, Major-General,
Inspector-General of Military Prisons, &c.

Note.—The number of offences committed and the number of punishments awarded do not, of course, agree, it being the practice in some cases to award concurrently several forms of punishment for one offence, while in others the offence is met by admonition without punishment.

EXTRACTS from the REPORTS of the Governors, Chief Warders in charge, and Medical Officers.

ALDERSHOT.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

There has been a large decrease in the number of fraudulently enlisted men, and of those tried for "violence and disobedience to superiors" and for "minor insubordination and neglect of orders."

The conduct of the prisoners has been satisfactory.

The offence for which the majority of the prisoners were reported and punished, was "idleness."

The repairing of bed straps and firemen's boots has been introduced, in addition to hospital slippers and gymnasium shoes.

The beds manufactured have given every satisfaction to the Ordnance Store Department,—there was but one rejection, and not a single complaint was received.

There was a difficulty in obtaining a sufficient supply of stones for breaking purposes, owing to the scarcity of transport, but, since conveyances have been supplied by the Army Service Corps, it has been overcome, and there is now an abundant supply.

The conduct of the officers has been very satisfactory.

Extracts from the Report of the Medical Officer.

Chief warder in charge died 8th December 1894 from Bright's disease.

General health of prisoners good. No deaths among prisoners. Five prisoners sent to hospital. One case of dementia,—previous to enlistment had been an inmate of Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, discharged the service, and given over to his friends by the military authorities. Other cases did well.

Sanitary condition of prison and its vicinity good. Cells, work rooms, and other buildings kept clean and in good order.

Water supply of good quality, abundant in quantity.

Punishment drills have been regularly carried out, no ill effects on the health of the prisoners. Great improvement in crank labour since reduction of revolutions required. I consider it unfit for military prisoners.

Warming and ventilation.—Much improved since air brick was put in over each cell door.

Diets.—Good, varied, well cooked and served.

Latrines and urinals.—Regularly flushed and kept clean.

Remarks.—Considerable reduction in the number of admissions. As before reported the mental capacity of prisoners is small. Recent observations of Ribot on "the Psychology of Attention" throw a flood of light on, and afford an explanation of, the cause of protracted labour not being performed by those possessing "instability of attention," well described by Sollier, and so common among military prisoners, and the cause of many military offences. This should be recognised by all prison officials. The idea of our older penologists was to enforce distasteful and unproductive work, with result that men, after long terms of imprisonment, possessed minds only fitted for routine work of a prison. As pointed out by Ribot, the transition of spontaneous to voluntary attention is best developed by "rendering attractive by "artifice what is not so by nature by giving an artificial interest to "things that have not a natural interest." "Voluntary attention is a product of art, of education, of direction, and of training." On this account I again most strongly recommend that some form of military drill be introduced into the prison. As the recruits for the army are now directly or indirectly drawn from the industrial centre, the study of Mr. Huxley's "Evolution and Ethics," especially the essay on "The Struggle for existence in Human Society," may be useful, as many of our military prisoners have belonged to the class "la misère," so graphically and truthfully described.

Fraudulent enlistment, one of the worst military crimes carried on by men who belong to a class of incorrigible swindlers and sharpers, who abound on our race courses, and are found in the vicinity of places where horses are sold by public auction—study of Delbureck may enable us to deal more effectually with this offender. Something might be done by military prison warders attending the recruiting centres in London. Although the recruits are now drawn from the industrial centre, I fear there is still much truth in the observation (written more than a century since) by the historian of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. "The risks of the military "profession, seem only to be compensated by a life of pleasure and "idleness; if the duties of the soldier are incessantly aggravated by "the labours of the peasant, he either breaks down under the intolerable "burden or throws it off with indignation." The most important fact in the prison management during the last year was the great reduction in the number of defaulters reported for idleness or breaches of prison discipline, with the best results, during the last four months.

BARBADOS.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

There were 123 admissions during the year, including 6 from the Royal Navy and Marines, showing a decrease of 46 on the previous year, and a decrease of 72 on the year 1892.

The conduct of the prisoners has been good, there was no case of corporal punishment, and only one prisoner was punished by a visitor during the year, there were 34 cases of minor punishments, chiefly for idleness.

The sentence of one prisoner was remitted by the General Officer Commanding.

Five prisoners were transferred to the United Kingdom during the year, four for discharge with ignominy on arrival, and one for re-committal.

The labour in the prison is continued to be carried out strictly in accordance with paragraph 150 of the Rules for Military Prisons, the stage system is still enforced. First stage prisoners have been employed at shot drill, crank, and stone breaking, for the Royal Engineers and War Department Contractor (except during part of the months of October and November, when I was obliged to employ all hands at bed making and hair picking, as there was a great demand for barrack and hospital beds, and only a very small number of prisoners in at the time). First stage prisoners have also been employed at oakum picking from 6 to 8 p.m. daily. Second, third, and fourth stage prisoners have been employed at hair picking, bed and bolster making, cooking for prisoners, cleaning and jobbing in and about the prison, repairing prison shoes, and washing and repairing prison clothing.

The earnings of the prisoners for the past year compare favourably with other years. 4*l.* 5*s.* was received from the War Department Contractor for stone broken by prison labour for military purposes.

The health of the prison staff has not been good, there has been one death during the year. One has suffered from "fever and ague," and another from "hepatitis."

The health of the officers' families has also been bad.

The officers continue to discharge their duties to my entire satisfaction.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

The health of the prisoners for the past year has been good.

There have been six admissions to the station hospital, none of them of a serious nature.

There has been no necessity to resort to corporal punishment.

The health of the prison staff has been fair only.

The sanitary condition of the prison, or its surroundings, is very good.

Diets of good quality and well cooked.

Clothing suitable to climate, kept in good order and very clean.

BERMUDA.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

The conduct of the prisoners, on the whole, has been very good, only one case to go before the visiting officers during the year.

Labour consisted of bed making, levelling grounds, breaking stones for Royal Engineers, repairing bed straps, and cutting wood for the Army Service Corps, whitewashing chief warders' quarters and prison buildings, and picking oakum from 6 to 8 p.m. The washing and mending of the prison clothing and bedding, and repairs to prison shoes have also been done by prisoners.

The first stage have performed shot drill daily.

The prisoners have been employed in association during the day (when hair picking) but have been kept in separate cells during the night and meal times.

The diets have been of good quality.

The conduct of the warders and of the soldiers employed on night watchman's duty has been very good.

EXTRACT from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

The health of the prison warders has been good, as well as that of the prisoners.

The sanitary state of the prison is good, and no changes have been made during the year, except a slight alteration causing a change of direction for surface water.

The food supplies have been satisfactory.

The water supply is ample, and of good quality; there is an efficient filter in use.

BRIXTON.

Extracts from the Report of the Chief Warder in charge.

During the year 424 prisoners were received into this prison, being 123 less than the previous year when 547 were admitted, 144 was the highest number confined on any one day and 83 the lowest, the daily average being 102 against 179 and 98 respectively and a daily average of 134 for 1893.

The principal portion of the offences appear to come under the following heads, viz., Desertions, Fraudulent Enlistment, Violence, and Absence, 373 having been convicted for the offences named; nearly double the number of last year have been committed for the latter crime (absence), which no doubt is accounted for by the committal of a number of militiamen (for being absent from training) in consequence of an order issued by the General Officer Commanding Home District on the 29th May 1894, which was as follows:—

"Men of militia battalions sentenced to imprisonment by courts-martial and who are not in possession of uniform and necessaries will be committed to Brixton Military Prison to undergo their punishment instead of to the Provost Prison."

The conduct of the prisoners, the number of offences, and the number of prisoners punished will, it is thought, compare favourably with past years; four prisoners received corporal punishment, awarded by Visitors and confirmed by the General Officer Commanding Home District.

During the year 111 prisoners have been discharged the service at the expiration of their imprisonment, four of which were handed over to the Prisoners' Aid Society; the remainder preferring to be sent home or to places of attestation.

The prison has been regularly visited during the year by a weekly Visitor, it has also been visited by the General Officer Commanding the District, on every occasion the report being satisfactory.

The prisoners have been employed as follows,—those on the 1st stage, if medically fit, on the crank and shot drill; those in the 1st stage fit only for 2nd class labour, also those on 2nd, 3rd, and 4th stages have been employed at making paillasse cases, tent, for Woolwich, prisoners' clothing (uniform) for Pimlico, washing bedding, &c., for London barracks, making sacks, &c., balling coir yarn, and the ordinary service of the prison.

On reference to the amount of money earned by productive labour it will be seen that the amount earned for washing (which is calculated from contract rates supplied by the Barrack Department) is 633*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* This does not represent the whole of the money earned in this department, the cost of fuel, water, soap, &c., having been deducted from the earnings.

During the year 268,233 sacks have been made, this number is 46,677 more than was made last year; 350 cwt. of coir yarn was made into 7 lb. balls, being 20 cwt. more than was balled in 1893. The amount received and placed to the credit of the Chief Paymaster of the Home District for sack-making and balling coir yarn was 227*l.* 8*s.* 10*d.*, which is the largest amount that has been received for a similar period since this prison was declared a military one.

In addition to the above, 500 waistcoats and 600 pair of trousers have been made for Pimlico, also 3,577 paillasse cases, tent, for Woolwich, the earnings for which amount to 205*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*

The work performed for Royal Engineers was the scraping of the walls of two halls and 170 cells.

The earnings of the prisoners (46) employed under the head of productive employment cover the cost of food, fuel, gas, and water consumed in this establishment for the whole of the prisoners confined during the year.

The total sum earned by the prisoners (although the daily average number was 32 less) is larger than the previous year.

It will be observed that a very small quantity of oakum has been picked during the year.

The change in the hospital treatment of prisoners appears to work satisfactorily, and the staff generally have benefited thereby.

Discipline has been fully maintained and the conduct of the officers was satisfactory.

The health of the prisoners has been exceptionally good.

There have not been any men discharged on medical grounds.

The health of the staff leaves nothing to be desired and no one has been invalided.

The death-rate since the opening of this establishment for military offenders is 1·10 per 1,000.

The hospital ward was closed on November 9th, and all cases of sickness requiring special treatment are located in cells set apart for that purpose on the ground floor of B hall.

During the year there were 539 admissions, composed as under :—

District - - - - -	138
Regimental - - - - -	33
Summary awards by Commanding Officers -	357
Naval prisoners - - - -	7

This shows an increase of 21 on the previous year, which is mainly due to the fact of soldiers being able to purchase cheap drink in town, but very recently I have been pleased to notice that some of the "grog shops" have been closed, and others have been placed out of bounds to soldiers, a great diminution in crime being the result.

The prisoners have been employed as far as possible at productive labour, the stage system being strictly enforced.

First stage prisoners have been employed at shot drill and stone-breaking, except during the hottest of the weather, when it was suspended by order of the medical officer; they were then employed at washing barrack linen, also hospital linen and clothing. All first stage prisoners were employed at picking oakum or fibre from 6 to 8 p.m.

Second and third stage prisoners were employed in repairing barrack linen, also hospital linen and clothing and re-making of hair beds.

Fourth stage prisoners were employed at mat-weaving, also in the service of the prison such as cleaning and jobbing, cooking for prisoners repairing prison clothing and shoes, &c.

The conduct of the prisoners during the year has been satisfactory, except in six instances, when it was found necessary to resort to corporal punishment. The chief offence has been idleness at task work.

The conduct of the warders has been most satisfactory.

Sanitary condition very satisfactory.

CHESTER.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

There were 392 prisoners received during the year, being an increase of 54 on the previous year. This is largely owing to the recent Army Order dealing with militiamen absent from training.

The conduct of the prisoners on the whole was satisfactory, and discipline was well maintained.

The amount received for productive labour was 287*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, an increase of 47*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* on the previous year.

The general health of the prisoners has been good.

No. 4132 Private A. E. was in hospital on the 1st January 1894, and was subsequently invalided out of the Army. (Acute rheumatism.)

No. 4311 Private M., 1st Battalion King's Own Scottish Borderers, was for some time treated in prison for an injury to the knee, the result of a fall in his cell. Chronic synovitis set in, and he was sent back to his regiment, his punishment having been remitted, as his health was in danger of being affected by confinement in prison. He had suffered previously from this complaint.

No. 3534 Private W. H., Depôt, Manchester Regiment, has been under treatment for debility for a considerable time, the result of chronic Bright's disease.

The sanitary state of the prison has been satisfactory.

The various diets have been good and sufficient.

CORK.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

The number of prisoners admitted during the year was 214 less than in 1893.

There has been one case of corporal punishment during the year for the offence of breaking cell windows and cell furniture, and I had occasion to bring this same prisoner four times before the Visitors, who, on the last occasion, sentenced him to receive 25 lashes with the cat; 20 lashes were inflicted, the remaining 5 lashes being remitted by the Visitor, at the request of the Medical Officer. Since this prisoner has been punished with the cat his conduct in prison has been good, although, previous to that, he was trying to act as if insane.

Twenty-eight hard-labour cranks have been repaired by the Royal Engineers, so that all the prisoners in first stage are employed at crank labour when not at stone breaking.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

The sanitary conditions and general health of the prisoners present the same satisfactory features as noticed in the reports for the past three years. Since the introduction of water-closets in lieu of an objectionable privy-cesspit system of conservancy in March 1891, there has been an almost total freedom from slight attacks of diarrhœa, previously so prominent.

The duties continue moderate, and had no unfavourable influence upon health, a considerable number of the men being employed in tailoring, shoemaking, mattress making, &c.

The rations were good as a rule, and the diets comfortably cooked. The soup was always excellent, and the greatest care taken to secure the utmost possible amount of nutriment in this item.

Officers and servants enjoyed good health.

DUBLIN.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

Six cases of corporal punishment were inflicted during the year, four for wilfully damaging prison property, one for violence to a warder, and one for insubordination; five of the punishments were inflicted with the cat and one with the birch rod, one prisoner was flogged twice with the cat; otherwise the conduct of the prisoners has been generally good.

Thirty cranks which had not been in use for some years were put in thorough order by the Royal Engineers in March last, and crank labour commenced on the 30th of the same month.

Prisoners in the first stage have been employed on the crank, shot drill, and stone-breaking; those prisoners at shot drill and stone-breaking also picked oakum in their cells. Prisoners in the second, third, and fourth stages have been employed in making cases, tent paillasses, repairing prison clothing and prison shoes, washing prison clothing, picking oakum in cells, and cleaning and jobbing about prison; prisoners of good conduct were selected from the fourth stage for employment in the cookhouse.

By order of the Major-General commanding the Dublin District, prisoners awarded punishment by their Commanding Officers were received in this prison during the repairing of the Provost Prison at Richmond Barracks.

The warders have been very regular in their attendance, and have performed their duties in a satisfactory manner.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

During the past year 453 men were admitted into prison. Of these 215, or 47·4 per cent., were under 21 years of age, and their average weight was 10 st. 9 lbs.

Of those who were discharged during the year, 31·7 per cent. lost weight, being 10 per cent. above the rate of last year. This was due to the larger proportion employed at crank labour instead of shot drill, but will, no doubt, be reduced in the present year, owing to the reduction of the number of revolutions and diminution of pressure which has been ordered.

The number of daily sick treated for trivial ailments amounted to 799, while three cases only were of sufficient gravity to require admission into the Royal Infirmary. Of these one was subsequently discharged as a harmless lunatic; he was of poor physical development, weighing only 9 st. 7 lb., and, though possessed of extreme cunning, was of low mental capacity.

The health of the warders and their families has been good.

The prison has been in a perfect sanitary state.

Six men received corporal punishment, five with the cat and one with the birch.

GIBRALTAR.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

I beg to draw attention to the further decrease in the number of admissions (183) from last year, the strength of the garrison being much the same. During the past year there were 52 naval prisoners admitted into this prison.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good. The breaches of prison discipline have fallen considerably from last year; on looking into the ages of those prisoners who have been recorded for breaches of prison discipline, it is found that a large majority are under 20 years of age and have less than one year's service. The breaches of prison discipline have, however, been of a very simple nature, such as may be expected from the young and experienced soldier, and when met by a kindly admonition and pointing out their error a repetition of the offence has rarely occurred. One man belonging to the East Lancashire was flogged twice. He was of low intellect, with a violent temper. He was undergoing a sentence of six calendar months, and was only in prison a few days when he began to show a spirit of insubordination, which culminated in his striking a warder. He was tried by a Board of Visitors, and sentenced to 25 lashes; two months afterwards he again struck a warder, was tried and sentenced to 25 lashes; afterwards, and during the remainder of his sentence, he did his work well, and gave me no further trouble. His age by committal was shown as 23, but looked much older, service one year.

The employment for prisoners during the past year has been stone breaking for the Royal Engineers, the prisoners so employed having passed the first stage. First stage prisoners have performed shot drill and crank labour, prisoners employed in the service of the prison have been selected from the fourth stage prisoners unless where a prisoner has been recommended for lighter employment by the Medical Officer. 75 prison beds were re-made in the early part of the year. I was looking forward that such work could be done for the garrison in the prison, but as the plans and ground has been selected to build a steam laundry, on the west side of the prison, the boundary wall forming a part, whereby the washing required for the garrison by the Barrack Department will be done principally by prison labour, therefore I do not venture to make any suggestion regarding the re-making of beds.

The health of the prisoners has been good.

The health of the warders and their families was good up to the 10th December, when diphtheria appeared in the family of one of the warders.

Extracts from the Report of the Medical Officer.

The health of the prisoners has been good. Seven cases had to be sent to the Station Hospital.

The various duties and punishments were in no way prejudicial to the health of the prisoners.

The dieting was in accordance with regulations and appears sufficient to maintain health.

Stored and filtered rain water is used for drinking purposes, and sanitary water for ablution and flushing. Both are ample in amount.

The latrines for the prisoners have been renewed, and are suitable.

A wash-house and two baths have been added, and the ground outside covered with concrete.

The warders and their families enjoyed good health, and with the exception of Alfred, F———, age $7\frac{9}{12}$, who contracted diphtheria and died, there has been no severe disease.

The Royal Engineers made a sanitary inspection of the drains, &c., but found nothing wrong except that the water-closets in the yard at the back were unventilated.

There has been a large excavation going on near the prison, the earth from which being mixed with stable refuse has been spread out on the land adjoining for the purpose of rendering it fertile.

The prevailing winds blow over this before reaching the prison.

Condensed milk is invariably used, and the water supply is excellent.

The cause of the disease is at present unknown.

GOSPORT.

Extracts from the Report of the Governor.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good.

The employment of the prisoners has been, as in several years past, mainly the manufacture of beds and paillasse cases for barracks and tents. There was, however, a break of six weeks during which, owing to the non-supply of material, there was no work available except oakum picking. These breaks add considerably to the difficulty of turning out a fair quantity of sufficiently well done work, as during them one loses many of the best workers, and when a large number of unskilled men have to be got into work by warders themselves unskilled the inevitable result is a deterioration of either quantity or quality of the out-turn. The quality of the work done has been pronounced by the Ordnance Department good, but during the latter part of the year, after the receipt of new material in September, the quantity turned out has not been as satisfactory as I would have desired. Were the work continuous the quantity and quality would both show an improvement.

There is a marked increase in the number of Army Reserve men fraudulently re-enlisted.

The number of men but recently enlisted who are found on admission to be physically unfit for even a moderate task of hard labour is considerable, many being found apparently to have weak hearts, at least their state is so described.

Undesirable recruits seem to find access to the service too easy.

Considerable advance has been made in the sanitary improvements, especially as regards warders' quarters, in all of which new and improved closets have been fixed. A good deal still remains to be done, which, I understand, will be taken in hand as funds become available.

The general sanitary condition of the prison has been good. A great improvement has been effected in the warders' quarters by putting in new water-closets of improved pattern, affording better ventilation and an increased flush of water.

The dietary has not been changed during the year. The gains and losses in weight were as follow :—

Gained in weight	293
(Average gain per man 5·11 lbs.)
Lost in weight	101
(Average loss per man 4·41 lbs.)
Neither gained nor lost	52
Total discharged	446

The duties are unchanged from last year. A large number of prisoners are employed in bed-making, a much better occupation than the monotonous oakum picking.

The temperature of the prison has been fairly maintained during the year.

The baths have been kept clean and in good order. The cleanliness of the prisoners has been satisfactory. The cases of sickness have been rather more numerous than during last year, but the increase has chiefly been among diseases of an unimportant kind, e.g., boil, whitlow, itch, &c The febrile infectious class is represented only by three cases of influenza of mild type. No case of zymotic disease has been treated arising from any insanitary condition.

Seven fresh cases of ague have been treated, two of which required hospital treatment. In all the cases the disease was contracted abroad.

Three prisoners have been under observation for mental symptoms.

The first case, Private J. G————, East Lancashire Regiment, suffered from tapeworm. On the evening of July 11th he made a determined attempt to hang himself in his cell with his towel and handkerchief, which he fixed to the bar of the window. He was sent to hospital, and his time expired while there. He was thought to suffer from melancholia, and was transferred to the Lunatic Asylum, Netley.

The second case was that of Private J. B., Connaught Rangers, who appeared dull, depressed, and taciturn for a few days. He soon, however, recovered his spirits, his appetite and sleep returned, and his manner became cheerful and rational.

The third case, Private F. E———, Leinster Regiment, exhibited some mental excitement on religious subjects for a time.

A case of stricture of urethra, Gunner J. G———, R.A., was severe. While in prison he suffered from frequent attacks of retention of urine, requiring the use of catheters, the passing of which brought on severe rigors. It was necessary to transfer him to hospital, where he remained at the end of the year.

Seven cases of itch have been treated. The disease in the majority of cases does not originate in prison, but is found to affect prisoners on admission, or it develops very soon afterwards. No spread of the complaint takes place owing to the measures of isolation, cleanliness, and fumigation put in force.

The warders and their families have been healthy. A warder was under treatment for an attack of "aphasia" of sudden development. Recovery was rapid, and he was soon able to resume duty.

HALIFAX (NOVA SCOTIA).

Extracts from the Report of the Chief Warder in charge.

220 prisoners were received into this prison during the year 1894, which exceeds the number received during the previous year by 40, of these admissions 44 were sentenced by courts-martial, 147 were summarily sentenced by Commanding Officers, of which number 23 were sentences under the increased powers of Field Officers, and 29 belonged to the Royal Navy, of the latter 4 only were sentenced by courts-martial. The first naval prisoner was received on the 7th of April, and the last two were released on remission of sentence on the 5th of December, the daily average of Naval prisoners counting the whole year was 4, counting the time from 7th April to 5th December, the daily average was a little over 6. On the 5th November seven were transferred to a naval prison at home to complete their imprisonment.

The conduct of the prisoners has not been so good as last year, 46 were punished for 101 offences, 4 were punished by Visitors, and one was tried by district court-martial for attempting to escape from prison, and was sentenced to a further term of six calendar months imprisonment.

Discipline of the prison has, as far as circumstances permit, been maintained in accordance with the prison regulations, but discipline can only be fully enforced in those prisons that are constructed and worked upon the separate system; it is impossible at all times to enforce the law as laid down in the prison regulations where the prisoners live, work, and sleep in association. On the 31st December there were 21 prisoners in confinement here, of which number 9 were convicted of felony, and 7 were under sentence of discharge with ignominy; in my opinion it would be far better to send such men as these to a home prison instead of leaving them here to contaminate those who have to return to barrack life on leaving prison. If those convicted of offences of an immoral, dishonest, or criminal character could be keep in separate cells it would not be so bad, but this cannot be done. During the month of August, when the fleet was at this station, the daily average number in confinement was 28·74; these were all locked in one room with the night watchman for 10 consecutive hours out of every 24.

Imprisonment in association in my opinion is not sufficiently dreaded to deter men from committing crimes to evade punishment drill in barracks.

I again beg to recommend that more separate accommodation be provided, and would also suggest that until this is done that no more prisoners belonging to the Royal Navy be received into the prison.

Labour during the year has been similar to that of previous years. The first stage performed crank labour, shot drill, and stone breaking; the second, third, and fourth stages have been employed in the stone quarry, also in repairing roads and sea walls. The annual supply of coal was stacked by prison labour, and the cash handed over to the District Paymaster; some of the best conducted prisoners in the third and fourth stages have been selected for employment in the service of the prison; all prisoners pick oakum from 6.30 p.m. to 8 p.m., stone-breaking is the chief employment, the stone is hard granite and is quarried by the prisoners on the mainland some distance from the prison, stone for winter employment has to be quarried and carted into the prison yard before the winter sets in, usually during the months of September and October.

The conduct of the warders has been exemplary.

The warders are still living in the same quarters, but these have been somewhat improved, stoves have been put in the rooms where the cold was felt, and some of the windows have had storm sashes fitted to them.

The chapel has been painted and decorated, and a new communion table erected on a small raised platform; morning prayers are said by the chaplain on Wednesdays and Fridays, and divine service is held on Sunday mornings.

The usual work of shot drill and breaking stones by prisoners in the first stage has been carried out. The second, third, and fourth stage prisoners have been employed under the direction of the Royal Engineers in making and repairing roads, clearing surface drains, cutting jungle, and pumping water.

Violence and disobedience to superiors stand at the head of the list of crimes, many of which were committed by young soldiers with less than three years' service, and who joined from England at the beginning of the year.

Four refractory cells are about to be erected, and 16 cranks are being fitted in the prison which, I hope, will have the desired effect of lessening the crime in the prison as well as being a deterrent to those outside.

Extracts from the Report of the Medical Officer.

The health of the prisoners during the year has been good. The total number under treatment being 110. Of this number only 13 were transferred to hospital for treatment. The remainder was made up principally by a number of slight cases of diarrhœa and scarlet fever, which occurred chiefly in the half year ending 31st December. I think the increase of slight case of illness the latter part of the year was entirely due to climatic influences the months of September and October being very trying.

The total number of admissions to prison during the year, including those remaining on 31st December 1893, was 563.

The average daily sick was 2·05.

The average daily strength was 98.

There were eight cases of dysentery during the year, of these four were transferred to hospital, and two did not return to the prison. Four other cases were treated in prison and recovered.

Scarlet Fever.—There were 27 cases in all, two were transferred to hospital, 25 cases treated in cells. Of the 25 cases 21 were under treatment for four days on an average, four cases were under treatment 11·5 days.

Diarrhœa.—The total number of cases under treatment was 29. Only one case was transferred to hospital. 28 cases were treated in cells, the average time under treatment and excused duty was 4·5 days. All these cases were of a trivial nature, but were all shown in the admission and discharge books, on account of a special dietary being issued in every case.

Abscess.—There were two cases transferred to hospital, and one treated in prison.

One man was kept under observation for six days, no disease being detected.

One man transferred to hospital complaining of head symptoms. He is still in hospital, but the disease has not been diagnosed.

One man transferred to hospital with gum-boil; got an attack of pyæmia while there, and died.

The health of warders and their families has been good.

There was one case of suicide by hanging, neck dislocated.

MAURITIUS.

Extracts from the Report of the Chief Warder in charge.

During the year 30 prisoners were punished, a great increase in the number of punishments compared with last year. I have had great difficulty in maintaining the discipline of the prison owing to my staff, which consisted of a lance-corporal and three private soldiers as warders, who required as much looking after as the prisoners themselves. During the eight months that I was in charge in 1894 I had 36 soldier warders; the frequent changes of these subordinates made my duties very hard.

First-class hard labour prisoners have been employed at shot drill and stone-breaking, second, third, and fourth stage prisoners at cleaning shell, cutting hedges, grass, &c., for Ordnance Store Department, clearing hospital grounds, and making up roads and whitewashing prison throughout for Royal Engineer Works. Cleaning and jobbing about the prison, washing and repairing prison clothing, &c.

Exercise on Sundays is given to all prisoners.

The general conduct of the prisoners has been good under the existing conditions.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

The prison is visited every day by a medical officer; it is very clean, and great care is taken to keep it so. Suitable sanitary precautions are observed.

The ordinary water supply is not good; before use it is boiled and filtered.

Drainage is by superficial drains, which are kept clean and in good order.

During the first half of the year the health of prisoners was not at all good, but there was a marked improvement during the second half; the illness was due to malarial fevers. The Chief Warder was invalided in April. The warders suffer much from fever, and this may be attributed to their living on the ground floor.

The food is of good quality and sufficient. Shot drill is performed for one hour and a half twice a day, morning and evening. Stone-breaking is generally going on. The work is not too severe.

STIRLING.

Extracts from the Report of the Chief Warder in charge.

There were 161 prisoners admitted during the year, being 31 less than for the preceding year.

Desertion is again the cause of the majority of commitments, there being 90 cases during the year, 29 of whom had previously been convicted for this crime. In every case of re-committal for desertion I have endeavoured to ascertain the cause which led to this step being taken. In nearly every case the heavy debt incurred by the first desertion, and the opprobrium they have been made to feel on rejoining their corps, has been assigned as the reason for again deserting. Some few have stated that they did not like the army, and would not remain. None of the other crimes call for special remark.

With a few exceptions the conduct of the prisoners has been very good. On four occasions only was I obliged to call upon a Visitor to award a greater punishment than my own power authorized me to impose. Corporal punishment was inflicted on one prisoner for wilfully destroying the utensils of his cell just before the expiration of his sentence of 42 days.

For the most part the offences consisted of idleness in not doing the prescribed revolutions at crank labour, or failing to pick the daily prescribed task of oakum.

The duties and discipline have been carried out strictly in accordance with the rules and regulations for military prisons.

Paillasse case making has been attended with great success, 3,500 of these cases having been made during the year. As in former years all repairs to, and the cleansing of, prison clothing has been performed by prison labour.

The officers of the prison have performed their duties with zeal and efficiency.

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Medical Officer.

The health of the prisoners during the year has been excellent, and the sanitary condition of the prison and its surroundings satisfactory.

The rations supplied were of good quality, and were well cooked. The clothing and bedding of the prisoners was sufficient, and regularly changed according to regulations. The prisoners had a warm bath once a week, and were exercised daily when the weather permitted. The water supply was good and sufficient. The latrines have been kept in a good sanitary state. The cells afford ample cubic space per man, and have been well ventilated and warmed when the season of the year required it.

Of 197 inmates (remainings and admissions included) there were four cases of sickness, viz., a case of rheumatism and dysentery, which were treated in the Station Hospital, it being close to the prison, and a case of inflammation of the inguinal glands, and a mild case of idiopathic erysipelas, which were treated in cells. The erysipelas was caused by exposure to a cold wind while out exercising.

Fourteen men were excused crank labour on account of light weight and general debility.

Of 174 men discharged, 134 gained in weight on an average of $6\frac{7}{16}$ pounds, and 23 lost on an average of $2\frac{9}{16}$ pounds, while 17 neither lost nor gained in weight.

The great majority of the prisoners were young soldiers imprisoned for desertion and fraudulent enlistment, and, while 77 per cent. of them gained in weight during their stay in prison, there is no reason to think that all did not gain in general health.

WYNBERG (SOUTH AFRICA).

EXTRACTS from the REPORT of the Chief Warder in charge.

We are now in possession of the new military prison at Wynberg, which was occupied by the prisoners on the 22nd October last. The warders also are comfortably housed in their own quarters outside the prison. The buildings are substantially built and well ventilated. The sanitary arrangements so far are very good. Nine cells are fitted with hard-labour cranks, an excellent punishment for military offenders; no prison should be without them. To their introduction I attribute the small number of admissions during the last three months as compared with previous months of the year.

The work performed by the prisoners has been carried out very satisfactorily. In order to find suitable and remunerative labour for the prisoners in this prison, I have asked that a laundry be built within the prison walls for the purpose of washing barrack and hospital clothing.

The conduct of the prisoners on the whole has been good. It was found necessary to inflict corporal punishment upon one prisoner for his repeated acts of insubordination in the prison, which had the desired effect.

Two prisoners (discharged army) recommended by me were assisted by the "Royal Society for assisting Discharged Prisoners," 32, Charing

Cross, London. One man, who was anxious to go where his mother lived, Bradford, was provided with a few clothes, railway fare paid, and given 5*s.* in cash. The other was similarly treated.

The subordinate officers have been very punctual and attentive, and have performed their duties very satisfactorily.
